

Om. 31 1

Amme THE Muny

P O E M S

O F

OSSIAN.

TRANSLATED

By JAMES MACPHERSON, Efg.

IN TWO VOLUMES.

VOL. I.

A NEW EDITION.

DUBLIN:

PRINTED FOR J. MOORE, NO. 45, COLLEGE-GREEN.

M DCC XC.

CONTENTS

OFTHE

FIRST VOLUME.

CATH-LODA,	Part First	-	1
,	Part Second	-	13
	Part Third		23
COMALA,	-		31
CARRIC-THUE	RA,	Street Street	41
CARTHON,		-	59
OINA-MORUL	, -	-	77
COLNA-DONA	وا		85
OITHONA,			91
CROMA,	-		101
CALTHON AN	D COLMAL	,	111
THE WAR OF	CAROS,		121
CATHLIN OF	CLUTHA,	_	131
SUL-MALLA o	F LUMON,		141
WAR of INIS.	THONA,	-	151
THE SONGS OF	SELMA,	-	159
	A 2	FIN	IGAL:

CONTENTS.

FINGAL, Book	I. ←		171
Book	II		191
Book	III.	-	205
Book	IV.		221
Book	V	-	235
Book	VI.		247
LATHMON,		-	261
DAR-THULA,	-	breed	275
DEATH OF C	UTHULLIN,	posses.	293

BATTLE or LORA,

305

PREFACE.

ITHOUT encreasing his genius, the Author may have improved his language, in the eleven years, that the following Poems have been in the hands of the Public. Errors in diction might have been committed at twenty-four, which the experience of a riper age may remove; and some exuberances in imagery may be restrained, with advantage, by a degree of judgment acquired in the progress of time. Impressed with this opinion, he ran over the whole with attention and accuracy; and, he hopes, he has brought the work to a state of correctness, which will preclude all future improvements.

The eagerness, with which these Poems have been received abroad, are a recompence for the coldness with which a few have affected to treat them at home. All the polite nations of Europe have transferred them into their respective languages; and they speak of him, who brought them to light, in terms that might flatter the vanity of one fond of same. In a convenient indifference for a literary reputation, the Author hears praise without being elevated, and ribaldry without being depressed. He has frequently seen the first bestowed too precipitately; and the latter is so faithless to its purpose, that it is often the only index to merit in the present age.

Though the taste, which defines genius, by the points of the compass, is a subject sit for mirth in itself, it is often a serious matter in the sale of a work. When rivers define the limits of abilities, as well as the boundaries of countries, a Writer may measure his success, by the latitude under which he was born. It was to avoid a part of this inconvenience, that the Author is said, by some, who speak without any authority, to have ascribed his own productions to another name. If this was the case, he was but young in the art of deception. When he placed the Poet in antiquity, the Translator should have been born on this side of the Tweed.

These observations regard only the frivolous in matters of literature; these, however, form a majority in every age and nation. In this country, men of genuine taste abound; but their still voice is drowned in the clamours of a multitude who judge by fashion of poetry, as of dress.

drefs. The truth is, to judge aright requires almost as much genius as to write well; and good critics are as rare as great poets. Though two hundred thousand Romans stood up, when Virgil came into the Theatre, Varius only could correct the Æneid. He that obtains fame must receive it through mere fashion; and gratify his vanity with the applause of men, of whose judgment he cannot approve.

The following Poems, it must be confessed, are more calculated to please per-sons of exquisite feelings of heart, than those who receive all their impressions by the ear. The novelty of cadence, in what is called a profe version, tho' not destitute of harmony, will not to common readers fupply the absence of the frequent returns of rhime. This was the opinion of the Writer himself, tho' he yielded to the judgment of others, in a mode, which presented freedom and dignity of expression, instead of fetters, which cramp the thought, whilst the harmony of language is preferved. His intention was to publish in verse. The making of poetry, like any other handicraft, may be learned by industry; and he had ferved his apprenticeship, though in secret, to the muses.

It is, however, doubtful, whether the harmony which these Poems might derive from rhime, even in much better hands than those of the Translator, could atone for the simplicity and energy, which they would lose. The determination of this point shall be left to the readers of this preface. The following is the beginning of a Poem, translated from the Norse to the Gaëlic language; and, from the latter, transferred into English. The verse took little more time to the writer than the profe; and even he himself is doubtful (if he has succeeded in either) which of them is the most literal version.

FRAGMENT OF A NORTHERN TALE.

Where Harold, with golden hair, fpread o'er Lochlin * his high commands; where with justice, he ruled the tribes, who sunk, subdued, beneath his sword; abrupt rises Gormal † in snow! The tempess roll dark on his sides, but calm, above, his vast forehead appears. White-issuing from the skirt of his storms, the troubled torrents pour down his sides. Joining as they roar along, they bear the Torno, in soam, to the main.

Grey.

. The Gaelie name of Scandinavia, or Scandinia.

[†] The mountains of Sevo.

Grey on the bank and far from men, half-covered, by ancient pines, from the wind, a lonely pile exalts its head, long-shaken by the storms of the north. To this sled Sigurd, sierce in fight, from Harold the leader of armies, when fate had brightened his spear with renown: When he conquered in that rude field, where Lulan's warriors fell in blood, or rose in terror on the waves of the main. Darkly sat the grey haired chief; yet forrow dwelt not in his soul. But when the warrior thought on the past, his proud heart heaved against his side: Forth slew his sword from its place, he wounded Harold in all the winds.

One daughter, and only one, but bright in form and mild of foul, the last beam of the setting line, remained to Sigurd of all his race. His son, in Lulan's battle slain, beheld not his father's flight from his soes. Nor finished seemed the ancient line! The splendid beauty of bright-eyed Fithon, covered still the fallen king with renown. Her arm was white like Gormal's snow; her bosom whiter than the soam of the sain, when roll the waves beneath the ath of the winds. Like two stars were er radiant eyes, like two stars that rise on the deep, when dark tumult embroils the the night. Pleasant are their beams aloft, as stately they ascend the skies.

Nor Odin forgot, in aught, the maid. Her form fcarce equalled her lofty mind. Awe moved around her ftately steps. Heroes loved—but shrunk away in their fears. Yet midst the pride of all her charms, her heart was soft, and her soul was kind. She saw the mournful with tearful eyes. Transient darkness arose in her breast. Her joy was in the chace. Each morning, when doubtful light wandered dimly on Lulan's waves, she rouzed the resounding woods, to Gormal's head of snow. Normoved the maid alone, &c.

The same versified.

Where fair-hair'd Harold, o'er Scandiniar eign'd, And held, with justice, what his valour gain'd, Sevo, in snow, his rugged for head rears, And, o'er the warfare of his storms, appears Abrupt and valit.—White-wandering down his side A thousand torrents, gleaming as they glide, Unite below; and pouring through the plain Hurry the troubled Torno to the main.

Grey, on the bank, remote from human kind, By aged pines, half sheltered from the wind, A homely mansion rose, of antique form, For ages batter'd by the polar storm.

To

To this fierce Sigurd fled, from Norway's lord, When fortune fettled, on the warrier's fword, In that rude field, where Succas's chiefs were flain, Or forced to wander o'er the Bothnic main. Dark was his life, yet undiffurb'd with woes, But when the memory of defeat arofe. His proud heart fruck his fide; he grafpt the fpear, And wounded Harold in the vacant air.

One daughter only, but of form divine, The laft fair beam of the departing line, Remain'd of Sigurd's race. His warlike fon Fell in the shock, which overturn'd the throne. Nor desolate the house! Fionia's charms Sustain'd the glory, which they lost in arms. White was her arm, as Sevo's losty snow, Her bosom fairer, than the waves below, When heaving to the winds. Her radiant eyes Like two bright stars, exulting as they rise, O'er the dark tumult of a stormy night, And gladd'ning heav'n, with their majestic light.

In nought is Odin to the maid unkind, Her form scarce equals her exalted mind, Awe leads her facred steps where'er they move, And mankind worship, where they dare not love. But, mix'd with softness, was the virgin's pride, Her heart had feelings, which her eyes deny'd. Her bright tears started at another's woes, While transient darkness on her soul arose.

The chace she lov'd; when morn, with doubtful beam, Came dimly wandering o'er the Bothnic stream,
On Sevo's sounding sides, she bent the bow,
And rouz'd his forests to his head of snow.

Nor mov'd the maid alone; &c.

One of the chief improvements, on this edition, is the care taken, in arranging the Poems in the order of time; fo as to form a kind of regular history of the age to which they relate. The Writer has now refigned them for ever to their fate. That they have been well received by the public, appears from an extensive sale; that they shall continue to be well received, he may venture to prophefy without the gift of that inspiration, to which poets lay claim. the medium of version upon version, they retain, in foreign languages, their native character of simplicity and energy. nuine poetry, like gold, loses little, when properly transfused; but when a composition cannot bear the test of a literal version. it is a counterfeit which ought not to pass current. The operation must, however, be performed with skilful hands. A Tranflator, who cannot equal his original, is incapable of expressing its beauties.

London, Aug. 15, 1789.

CATH-LODA:

A

P O E M.

DUAN FIRST.

ARGUMENT.

Frigat, when very young, making a voyage to the Orkney islands, was driven, by stress of weather, into a bay of Scandinavia, near the refidence of Starno, king of Lochlin. Starno invites Fingal to a feaft. Fingal, doubting the faith of the king, and mindful of a former breach of hospitality. - refuses to go .- Starno gathers together his tribes : Fingal refolves to defend himself .- Night coming on, Duthmaruno propofes to Fingal, to observe the motions of the enemy. -The king himself undertakes the watch. Advancing towards the enemy, he, accidentally, comes to the cave of Turthor, where Starno had confined Conban-carelas, the captive daughter of a neighbouring chief .- Her ftory is imperfect, a part of the original being loft .- Fingal comes to a place of worship, where Starno and his fon, Swaran, confulted the fpirit of Loda, concerning the iffue of the war .--'The rencounter of Fingal and Swaran .- Duan first concludes with a defeription of the airy hall of Cruth-loda, supposed to be the Odin of Scandinavia.

CATH-LODA.

DUAN*FIRST.

A TALE of the times of old!

Why, thou wanderer unseen! Thou bender of the thiftle of Lora; why, thou breeze of the valley, hast thou left mine ear? I hear no distant from of streams! No sound of the harp, from the rock! Come thou huntress of Lutha, Malvina, call back his soul to the bard. I look forward to B 2 Lochlin

" The bards diffinguished those compositions, in which the narration is often interrupted, by epifodes and apoftro, hee, by the name of Duan. Since the extinction of the order of the bards, it has been a general name for all ancient compositions. in verfe. The abrupt manner in which the ftory of this poem begins, may render it obscure to some readers; it may no therefore be improper, to give here the traditional preface, which is generally prefixed to it. Two years after he took to wife Ros-crana, the daughter of Cormac, king of Ireland, Fingal undertook an expedition into Orkney, to vifit his friend Cathulla, king of Iniftore. After flaying a few days at Caricthura, the refidence of Cathulla, the king fet fail, to return to Scotland; but, a violent from arising, his ships were driver into a bay of Scandinavia, near Gormal, the feat of Starno, king of Lochlin, his avowed enemy. Starno, upon the appearance of ftrangers on his coaft, furnmoned together the neighbouring tribes, and advanced in a hoffile manner, towards the bay of U-thorno, where Fingal had taken shelter. Upon discovering who the strangers were, and fearing the valour of Fingal, which he had, more than once, experienced before, he refolved to accomplish by treachery, what he was afraid he thould fail in by open force. He invited, therefore, Fingal to a feast, at which he intended to affassinate him. prudently declined to go, and Starno betook himfelf to arms. The fequel of the ftory may be learned from the poem itielf.

Lochlin of lakes, to the dark, billowy bay of Uthorno, where Fingal defeends from Ocean, from the roar of winds. Few are the heroes of Morven, in a land unknown!

Starno fent a dweller of Loda, to bid Fingal to the feast; but the king remembered the past, and all his rage grofe, " Nor Gormal's moffy towers, nor Starno, shall Fingal behold. Deaths wander, like thadows, over his fiery foul! Do I forget that beam of light, the whitehanded daughter * of kings ? Go, fon of Loda; his words are wind to Fingal; wind, that, to and fro, drives the thirtle, in autumn's durky vale. Duth-maruno +, arm of death! Cromma-glas, of iron fhields! Struthmor, dweller of battles wing! Cormar, whose ships bound on feas, careless as the course of a meteor, on dark-rolling clouds! Arife around me, children of heroes, in a land unknown! Let each look on his fhield, like Trenmor, the ruler of wars. Come down, thus Trenmor faid, thou dweller between the harps! Тĥои Agandecca, the daughter of Starno, whom her father killed, on account of her discovering to Fingal, a plot laid against his life. Her story is related at large, in the third book of Fingal.

† Duth-maruno is a name very famous in tradition. Mary of his great actions are handed down, but the poems, which contained the detail of them, are long fince loft. He lived, it is fupposed, in that part of the north of Scotland, which is over against Orkney. Duth-maruno, Cromma-glas, Struthmor, and Cormar, are mentioned, as attending Combal, in his last battle against the tribe of Morni, in a poem, which is still preserved. It is not the work of Oslian; the phraseology betrays it to be a modern composition. It is something like those trivial compositions, which the Irish bards forged, under the name of Oslian, in the sitteenth and sixteenth centuries.

Duth-maruno fignifies, black and fleady; Cromma-glas, bending and fwarthy; Struthmor, roaring fream; Cormar, expergt fea.

Thou shalt roll this stream away, or waste with me in earth."

Around the king they rife in wrath. No words come forth: they feize their fpears. Each foul is rolled into itfelf. At length the fudden clang is waked, on all their echoing fhields. Each takes his hill, by night; at intervals, they darkly frand. Unequal burfts the hum of fongs, between the roaring wind!

Broad over them rose the moon!

In his arms, came tall Duth-maruno; he from Croma of rocks, ftern hunter of the boar! In his dark boat he rofe on waves, when Crunthormo * awaked its woods. In the chace he fhone, among foes: No fear was thine, Duth-maruno!

"Son of daring Comhal, shall my steps be forward through night? From this shield shall I view them, over their gleaming tribes? Starno, king of lakes, is before me, and Swaran, the foe of strangers. Their words are not in vain, by Loda's stone of power.—Should Duth-maruno not return, his spouse is lonely, at home, where meet two roaring streams, on Crathmo-craulo's plain. Around are hills, with echoing woods, the ocean is rolling near. My son looks on screaming seafowl, a young wanderer on the field. Give the head of a boar to Can-dona †, tell him of his father's joy, when the bristly strength of I-thorno rolled on his lifted spear. Tell him of my deeds in war! Tell where his father fell!"

B 3 "Not

^{*} Crumthormoth, one of the Orkney or Shetland islands. The name is not of Galic original. It was subject to its own petty king, who is mentioned in one of Offian's poems.

[†] Cean-daona, head of the people, the fon of Duth-maruno. He became afterwards famous, in the expeditions of Offian, after the death of Fingal. The traditional tales concerning him are very numerous, and, from the epithet, in them, beflowed

" Not forgetful of my father's" faid Fingal, "I have bounded over the feas. Theirs were the times of danger, in the days of old. Nor fettles darknefs on me, before foes, tho' youthful in my locks. Chief of Crathmo-craulo, the field of night is mine."

Fingal rufhed, in all his arms, wide-bounding over Turthor's ftream, that feat its fullen roar, hv.

on him (Candona of boars) it would appear, that he applied himself to that kind of hunting, which his father, in this paragraph, is fo anxious to recommend to him. As I have mentioned the traditional tales of the Highlands, it may not be umproper here, to give fome account of them. After the expulfion of the bards, from the houses of the chiefs, they being an indolent race of men, owed all their fublistence to the generofity of the vulgar, whom they diverted with repeating the compositions of their predecessors, and running up the genealogies of their entertainers to the family of their chiefs. As this fubject was, however, foon exhausted, they were obliged to have recourse to invention, and form stories, having no foundation in fact, which were fwallowed, with great credulity, by an ignorant multitude. By frequent repeating, the fable grew upon their hands, and, as each threw in whatever circumstance he thought conducive to raise the admiration of his hearers, the flory became, at laft, fo devoid of all probability, that even the vulgar themselves did not believe it. They, however, liked the tales fo well, that the bards found their advantage in turning professed tale-makers. They then launched out into the wildest regions of fiction and romance. I firmly believe, there are more stories of giants, enchanted castles, dwarfs, and palfreys, in the Highlands, than in any country in Europe. These tales, it is certain, like other romantic compolitions, have many things in them unnatural, and confequentiv, difgustful to true taste, but, I know not how it happens, they command attention more than any other fictions I ever met with. The extreme length of these pieces is very surprifing, some of them requiring many days to repeat them, but fuch hold they take of the memory, that few circumflances are ever omitted by those who have received them only from oral tradition: What is fill more amazing, the very language of the bards is ftill preferved. It is curious to fee, that the descriptions of magnificence, introduced in these tales, is even furerior to all the pompous oriental fictions of the kind.

by night, through Gormal's mifty vale. A moonbeam glittered on a rock; in the midft, ftood a stately form; a form with floating locks, like Lochlin's white-bosomed maids. Unequal are her fleps, and fhort. She throws a broken fong on wind. At times the toffes her white arms:

for grief is dwelling in her foul.
"Torcul-torno *, of aged locks!" fhe faid, " where now are thy fteps, by Lulan? Thou haft failed, at thing own dark ftreams, father of Conban-cârgla! But I behold thee, chief of Lulan, fporting by Loda's hall, when the dark-skirted night is rolled along the fky.-Thou, fometimes, hideft the moon with thy fhield. I have feen her dim, in heaven. Thou kindleft thv hair into meteors, and failest along the night. Why am I forgot, in my cave, king of shaggy boars? Look, from the hall of Loda, on thy lonely daughter."

"Who art thou," faid Fingal, "voice of night ?"

She, trembling turned away.

"Who art thou, in thy darkness?"

She fhrunk into the cave.

The king loofed the thong from her hands.-He asked about her fathers.

Вл " Torcul-

^{*} Torcul-torno, according to tradition, was king of Crathlun, a district in Sweden. The river Lulan ran near the refidence of Torcul-torno. There is a river in Sweden, ftill called Lula, which is probably the fame with Lulan. The war between Starno and Torcul-torno, which terminated in the death of the latter, had its rife at a hunting party. Starno being invited, in a friendly manner, by Torcul-torno, both kings, with their followers, went to the mountains of Stivamore, to hunt. A boar rushed from the wood before the kings, and Torcul-torno killed it. Starno thought this behaviour a breach upon the privilege of guefts, who were always: Leasured, as tradition expresses it, with the danger of the chace-A quarrel

" Torcul-torno," fhe faid, " once dwelt at Lulan's foamy stream: he dwelt-but, now, in Loda's hall, he shakes the founding shell. He met Starno of Lochlin, in war; long fought the dark-eyed kings. My father fell, in his blood, blue-shielded Torcul-torno! By a rock, at Lulan's stream, I had pierc'd the bounding roe. My white hand gathered my hair, from off the rufhing winds. I heard a noife. Mine eyes were up. My foft breaft rose on high. My step was forward, at Lulan, to meet thee, Torcul-torno! It was Starno, dreadful king! His red eyes rolled on me in love. Dark waved his fhaggy brow, above his gathered fmile. Where is my father; I faid, he that was mighty in war? Thou art left alone among foes, O daughter of Torcul-torno! He took my hand. He raifed the fail. In this cave he placed me dark. At times, he comes, a gathered mift. He lifts, before me, my father's shield. But often passes a beam * of youth, far diftant from my cave. The fon of Starno moves in my fight. He dwells lonely in my foul."

" Maid of Lulan," faid Fingal, "white-handed daughter of grief! a cloud, marked with streaks

itreaks of

A quarrel arofe, the kings came to battle, with all their attendants, and the party of Torcul-torno were totally defeated, and he himself flain. Starno purfued his victory, laid waste the district of Crathlun, and, coming to the residence of Torcultorno, carried off, by force, Conban-carglas, the beautiful daughter of his enemy. Her he confined in a cave, near the palace of Gormal, where, on account of her cruel treatment, the became distracted.

The paragraph, just now before us, is the fong of Conbancarglas, at the time she was discovered by Fingal. It is in Lyric measure, and fet to music, which is wild and fimple, and so inimitably fuited to the fituation of the unhappy lady, that few can shear it without tears.

* By the beam of youth, it afterwards appears, that Conbancarglas means Swaran, the Son of Starno, with whom, during her confinement, the had fallen in love.

of fire, is rolled along thy foul. Look not to that dark-robed moon; look not to those meteors of heaven. My gleaming freel is around thee, the terror of thy foes! It is not the freel of the feeble, nor of the dark in foul! The maids are not flut in our* caves of fireams. They tos not their white arms alone. They bend, fair within their locks, above the harps of Selma. Their voice is not in the defart wild. We melt along the pleasing found!"

244

Fingal, again, advanced his steps, wide thro' the bosom of night, to where the trees of Loda shook amid squally winds. Three stones, with heads of moss, are there; a stream, with foaming course: and dreadful, rolled around them, is the dark-red cloud of Loda. High from its top looked forward a ghost, half-formed of the shadowy smoak. He poured his voice, at times, a-midst the roaring stream. Near, bending beneath a blasted tree, two heroes received his words: Swaran of lakes, and Starno foe of strangers. On their dun shields, they darkly leaned: their spears are forward through night. Shrill sounds the blast of darkness, in Starno's stoating beard.

They heard the tread of Fingal. The warriors role in arms. "Swaran, lay that wanderer low," faid Starno, in his pride. "Take the thield of thy father. It is a rock in war."—Swaran threw his gleaming spear. It stood fixed B.

³ From this contrast, which Fingal draws, between his own nation, and the inhabitants of Scandinavia, we may learn, that the former were much lefs barbarous than the latter. This distinction is so much observed throughout the poems of Offian that there can be no doubt, that he followed the real manners of both nations in his own time. At the close of the speech of Fingal, there is a great part of the original lost.

in Loda's tree. Then came the foes forward, with fwords. They mixed their rattling fteel. Through the thongs of Swaran's shield rushed the blade * of Luno. The shield fell rolling on earth. Cleft the helmet + fell down. Fingal ftopt the lifted steel. Wrathful stood Swaran, unarmed. He rolled his filent eyes; he threw his fword on earth. Then, flowly ftalking over the stream, he whistled as he went.

Nor unfeen of his father is Swaran. Starno turns away in wrath. His shaggy brows wave dark, above his gathered rage. He ftrikes Loda's tree, with his spear. He raises the hum of fongs. They come to the hoft of Lochlin, each in his own dark path; like two foam-covered ftreams, from two rainy vales!

To Turthor's plain Fingal returned. Fair rose the beam of the east. It shone on the spoils of Lochlin in the hand of the king. From her cave came forth, in her beauty, the daughter of 'Torcul-torno. She gathered her hair from wind. She wildly raifed her fong. The fong of Lulan of shells, where once her father dwelt. She saw Starno's bloody fhield. Gladness rose, a light, on her face. She faw the cleft helmet of Swaran ‡. She fhrunk, darkened, from Fingal.-

[.] The fword of Fingal, fo called from its maker, Luno of Lochlin.

[†] The helmet of Swaran. The behaviour of Fingal is always confiftent with that generofity of spirit which belongs to a hero. He takes no advantage of a foe difarmed.

t Conban-carglas, from feeing the helmet of Swaran bloody. in the hands of Fingal, conjectured that that hero was killed. A part of the original is loft. It appears, however, from the fequel of the poem, that the daughter of Torcul-torno did not long furvive her furprize, eccasioned by the supposed death of her lover. The description of the airy hall of Loda (which is Supposed to be the same with that of Odin, the deity of Scandinavia) is more picturefque and descriptive, than any in the dda, or other works of the northern Scalders.

" Art thou fallen, by thy hundred ftreams, O love of the mournful maid!"

U-thorno, that rifest in waters! on whose side are the meteors of night! I behold the dark meon descending, behind thy resounding woods. On thy top dwells the misty Loda: the house of the spirits of men! In the end of his cloudy hall, bends forward Cruth-loda of swords. His form is dimly seen, amid his wavy mist. His right-hand is on his shield. In his left is the half-viewless shell. The roof of his dreadful hall is

The race of Cruth-loda advance, a ridge of formless shades. He reaches the founding shell, to those who shone in war. But, between him and the feeble, his shield rifes, a darkened orb. He is a setting meteor to the weak in arms Bright, as a rainbow on streams, same Lulan's white-bosomed maid.

marked with nightly fires!

C A T H - L O D A:

A

P O E M.

DUAN SECONDA

ARGUMENT.

FINGAL returning with day, devolves the command or Dufnmaruno, who engages the enemy, and drives them over the fiream of Turthor. Having recalled his people, he congratulates Duch-maruno on his faceefs, but diffeovers, that that hero had been mortally wounded in the action.—Duthmaruno dies. Ullin, the bard, in honour of the dead, introduces the epifode of Colgorn and Strina-dona, which concludes this daïa,

CATH-LODA.

DUAN SECOND.

"WHERE art thou, fon of the king," faid dark-haired Duth-maruno? "Where haft thou failed, young beam of Selma? He returns not, from the bosom of night! Morning is spread on U-thorno. In his mist is the sun, on his hill. Warriors, lift the shields, in my presence. He must not fall, like a fire from heaven, whose place is not marked on the ground. He comes, like an eagle, from the skirt of his squally wind! In his hand are the spoils of soes. King of Selma, our souls were sad!"

Near us are the foes, Duth-maruno. They some forward, like waves in milt, when their foamy tops are feen, at times, above the low-failing vapour. The traveller shrinks on his journey; he knows not whither to fly. No trembling travellers are we! Sons of heroes call forth the steel. Shall the sword of Fingal arise, or thall a warrior lead?"

* The deeds of old, faid Duth-maruno, are like paths to our eyes, O Fingal! Broad-shielded Trenmor, is still feen, amidst hisown dim years. Nor feeble

[•] In this fhort epifode we have a very probable account given us, of the origin of monarchy in Caledonia. The Gaë or Gaule, who posselfed the countries to the north of the Frith of Edinburgh, were, originally, a number of distinct tribes, or clans, each subject to its own chief, who was free and independent of any other power. When the Romans invaded them, feeble was the foul of the king. There, no dark deed wandered in fecret. From their hundred ftreams came the tribes, to graffy Colglancrona. Their chiefs were before them. Each strove to lead the war. Their fwords were often half-unfheathed. Red rolled their eyes of rage. Separate they stood, and hummed their furly fongs. " Why fhould they yield to each other? their fathers were equal in war." Trenmor was there, with his people, stately in youthful locks. He faw the advancing foe. The grief of his foul arofe. He bade the chiefs to lead, by turns: they led, but they were rolled away. From his own mostly hill, blue-shielded Trenmor came down. He led wide-skirted battle, and the strangers failed. Around him the dark-browed warriors came: they ftruck the fhield of jov. Like a pleafant gale, the words of power ruffled forth from Selma of kings. But the chiefs led, by turns, in war, till mighty danger rose : then was the hour of the king to conquer in the field.

. "Not

them, the common danger might, perhaps, have induced those reguli to join together, but, as they were unwilling to yield to the command of one of their own number, their battles were ill-conducted, and confequently, unfuccefsful. Tremmor was the first who represented to the chiefs, the bad confequences of carrying on their wars in this irregular manner, and advised, that they themselves should alternately lead in battle. They did fo, but they were unfuccefsful. When it came to Treatmor's turn, he totally defeated the enemy, by his superior valour and conduct, which gained him fuch an interest among the tribes, that he, and his family after him, were regarded as kings; or, to use the poet's expression, the words of power rushed firth from Selma of kings. The regal authority, however, except in time of war, was but inconfiderable; for every chief, within his own diffrict, was absolute and independent, From the scene of the battle in this episode (which was in the valley of Crona, a little to the north of Agricola's wall), I should suppose, that the enemies of the Calcdonians were the Romans, or provincial Pritons.

"Not unknown," faid Cromma-glass * of fhields, "are the deeds of our fathers. But who shall now lead the war, before the race of kings? Mist settles on these four dark hills: within it let each warrior strike his shield. Spirits may defected in darkness, and mark us for the war."

They went, each to his hill of mift. Bards marked the founds of the fhields. Loudest rung thy boss, Duth-maruno. Thou must lead in war!

Like the murmur of waters, the race of U-thorno came down. Starno led the battle, and Swaran of ftormy ifles. They looked forward from iron fhields, like Cruth-loda fiery-eyed, when he looks from behind the darkened moon, and ftrews his figns on night. The foes met by Turthor's ftream. They heaved like ridgy waves.

* In tradition, this Cromma-glass makes a great figure in that battle which Comhal loft, together with his life, to the tribe of Morni. I have just now, in my hands, an Irish composition, of a very modern date, as appears from the language, in which all the traditions, concerning that decifive engagement are jumbled together. In justice to the merit of the poem, I fhould have here prefented to the reader a translation of it, did not the bard mention fome circumstances very ridiculous, and others altogether indecent. Morna, the wife of Comhal, had a principal hand in all the transactions previous to the defeat and death of her hufband; fhe, to use the words of the bard, who was the guiding flar of the women of Erin. The bard, it is to be hoped, mifrepresented the ladies of his country, for Morna's behaviour was, according to him, fo void of all decency and virtue, that it cannot be supposed, they had chosen her for their guiding flar. The poem confelts of many stanzas. The language is figurative, and the numbers harmonious; but the piece is fo full of anachronifms, and fo unequal in its composition, that the author, most undoubtedly, was either mad, or drunk, when he wrote it. It is worthy of being remarked, that Comhal is, in this poem, very often called, Comhal na b' Albin, or Combal of Albion, which fufficiently demonstrates, that the allegations of Keating and O'Flaherry, concerning Fion Mac-Gomnal, are but of late invention.

Their echoing strokes are mixed. Shadowy deatly flies over the hofts. They were clouds of hail, with fqually winds in their skirts. Their showers are roaring together. Below them fwells the dark-rolling deep.

Strife of gloomy U-thorno, why should I mark thy wounds! Thou art with the years that are gone; thou fadeft on my foul!

Starno brought forward his skirt of war, and Swaran his own dark wing. Nor a harmless fire is Duth-maruno's fword. Lochlin is rolled over her streams. The wrathful kings are lost in thought. They roll their filent eyes, over the flight of their land. The horn of Fingal was heard; the fons of woody Albion returned. But many lay, by Turthor's ftream, filent in their blood.

" Chief of Crathmo," faid the king, " Duthmaruno, hunter of boars! not harmless returns my eagle from the field of foes! For this white-bofomed Lanul shall brighten, at her streams; Candona shall rejoice, as he wanders in Crathmo's fields."

" Colgorm *," replied the chief, " was the first of my race in Albion; Colgorm, the rider of ocean, through its watery vales. He flew his brother

^{*} The family of Duth-maruno, it appears, came originally from Scandinavia, or, at leaft, from fome of the northern ifles, fubject, in chief, to the kings of Lochlin. The Highland fenachies, who never miffed to makes their comments on, and additions to, the works of Offian, have given us a long lift of the ancestors of Duth-maruno, and a particular account of their actions, many of which are of the marvellous kind. One of the tale-makers of the north has chosen for his hero. Starnmor, the father of Duth-maruno, and, confidering the adventures through which he has led him, the piece is neither difagreeable, nor abounding with that kind of fiction, which fhocks credibility.

ther in I-thorno*: he left the land of his fathers. He chose his place, in silence, by rocky Crathmocraulo. His race came forth, in their years; they came forth to war, but they always fell. The wound of my father's is mine, king of echoing isles!

- "He drew an arrow from his fide! He fell pale, in a land unknown. His foul came forth to his fathers, to their flormy ifle. There they purfued boars of mift, along the fkirts of winds. The chiefs flood filent around, as the flones of Loda, on their hill. The traveller fees them, through the twilight, from his lonely path. He thinks them the ghofts of the aged, forming future wars.
- "Night came down, on U-thorno. Still flood the chiefs in their grief. The blaft whiftled, by turns, through every warrior's hair. Fingal, at length, broke forth from the thoughts of his foul. He called Ullin of harps, and bade the fong to rife. "No falling fire, that is only feen, and then retires in night; no departing meteor was he that is laid fo low. He was like the ftrong-beaming fun, long rejoicing on his hill. Call the names of his fathers, from their dwellings old!"

I-thorno +, faid the bard, that rifeft midft ridgy feas! Why is thy head fo gloomy, in the ocean's mift?

^{*} An ifland of Scandinavia.

[†] This epifode is, in the original, extremely beautiful. It is fet to that wild kind of mufe, which fome of the High-unders diffinguifh, by the title of Fin Oi-marra, or, the Song of mermeids. Some part of the air is abfolutely infernal, but there are many returns in the measure, which are inexpressibly wild and beautiful. From the genius of the music, I should think it came originally from Scandinavia, for the fictions delivered down concerning the Oi-marra (who are reputed the authors of the music), exactly correspond with the notions of the northern nations, concerning their dire, or goldics of death.

mist? From thy vales came forth a race, fearless as thy strong-winged eagles; the race of Colgorn of iron fhields, dwellers of Loda's hall.

In Tormoth's refounding ifie, arose Lurthan, ftreamy hill. It bent its woody head over a filent vale. There, at foamy Cruruth's fource, dwelt Rurmar, hunter of boars! His daughter was fair as a sun-beam, white-bosomed Strina-dona!

Many a king of heroes, and hero of iron shields; many a youth of heavy locks came to Rurmar's echoing hall. They came to woo the maid, the stately huntress of Tormoth wild. But thou lookest careless from thy steps, high-bosomed Strinadona!

If on the heath she moved, her breast was whiter than the down of Cana*; if on the sea-beat shore, than the foam of the rolling ocean. Her eyes were two stars of light. Her face was heaven's bow in showers. Her dark hair slowed round it, like the streaming clouds. Thou were the dweller of souls, white-handed Strina-dona!

Colgorm came, in his ship, and Corcul-Suran, king of shells. The brothers came, from I-thorno, to woo the sun-beam of Tormoth wild. She saw them in their echoing steel. Her soul was fixed on blue-eyed Colgorm. † Ul-lochlin's nightly eye looked in, and saw the tossing arms of Stringardona.

Wrathful

[—]of all the names in this epifode, there is none of a Galic original, except Strina-dona, which fignifics, the first of heroes.

The Gana is a certain kind of grafs, which grows plentifully in the heathy morafies of the north. Its flalk is of the reedy kind, and it carries a tuft of down, very much refembling cotton. It is excellively white, and, confequently, often introduced by the bards, in their fimiles concerning the beauty of women.

[†] Ul-lochlin, the guide to Zecklin ; the name of a ftur-

Wrathful the brothers frowned. Their flaming eyes, in filence, met. They turned away. They fruck their flields. Their hands were trembling on their fwords. They rufhed into the firife of heroes, for long-haired Strina-dona.

Corcul-furan fell in blood. On his ifle, raged the ftrength of his father. He turned Colgorm, from I-thorno, to wander on all the winds. In Crathmo-craulo's rocky field, he dwelt by a foreign ftream. Nor darkened the king alone, that beam of light was near, the daughter of echoing Tormoth, white-armed Strina-dona.*

^{*} The continuation of this episode is just now in my hands; but the language is so different from, and the ideas so unworthy of, Oslian, that I have rejected it, as an interpolation by a modern bard.

CATH-LODA:

A

P O E M.

DUAN THIRD.

ARGUMENT.

OSSIAN, after fome general reflections, describes the fituation of Fingal, and the position of the army of Lochlin.—The conversation of Starno and Swaran.—The episode of Corman-trunar and Foinar-bragal.—Starno, from his own example, recommends to Swaran, to surprize Fingal, who had retired alone to a neighbouring hill. Upon Swaran's resulfal, Starno undertakes the enterprize himself, is overcome, and taken prisoner, by Fingal.—He is dimissed, after a severe reprimand for his cruelty.

CATH-LODA:

DUAN THIRD.

WHENCE is the ftream of years? Whither do they roll along? Where have they hid in mist, their many-coloured sides?

I look into the times of old, but they feem dim to Oflian's eyes, like reflected moon-beams, on a distant lake. Here rise the red beams of war! There, filent, dwells a feeble race! They mark no years with their deeds, as flow they pass along. Dweller between the shields! thou that awakest the failing soul! descend from thy wall, harp of Cona, with thy voices three! Come with that which kindles the past; rear the forms of old, on their own dark-brown years!

* U-thorno, hill of ftorms, I behold my race on thy fide. Fingal is bending, in night, over Vol. I. C Duth-

^{*} The bards, who were always ready to fupply what they thought deficient in the poems of Offian, have inferted a great many incidents between the fecond and third duan of Cathloda. Their interpolations are fo eafily diftinguished from the genuine remains of Offian, that it took me very little time to mark them out, and totally to reject them. If the modern Scotch and Irish bards have shewn any judgment, it is in afcribing their own compositions to names of antiquity, for by that means, they themselves have escaped that contempt, which the authors of fuch futile performances, must, necessarily, have met with, from people of true tafte. I was led into this observation, by an Irish poem, just now before me. It concerns a descent made by Swaran, king of Lochlin, on Ireland, and is the work, fays the traditional preface prefixed to it, of Offian Mac-Fion. It however appears, from feveral pious ejaculations, that it was rather the composition of some good prieft, in the fifteenth or fixteenth century, for he fpeaks, with great devotion, of pilgrimage, and more particularly, of the Duth-maruno's tomb. Near him are the fteps of his heroes, hunters of the boar. By Turthor's fiream the hoft of Lochlin is deep in fhader. The wrathful kings ftood on two hills; they looked forward from their bofly fhields. They looked forward to the ftars of night, red-wandering in the weft. Cruth-loda bends from high, like a formlefs meteor in clouds. He fends abroad the winds, and marks them, with his figns. Starno forefaw, that Morven's king was not to yield in war.

He twice firuck the tree in wrath. He rushed before his fon. He hummed a furly fong; and heard his hair in wind. Turned * from one another, they stood, like two oaks, which different winds had bent; each hangs over its own loud rill, and shakes its boughs in the course of blasts.

"Annir,"

the blue-cycl daughters of the convent. Religious, however, as this peet was, he was not altogether decent, in the feenes he introduces between Swaran and the wife of Congeullion, both of whom he reprefents as giants. It happening, unfortunately, that Congeullion was only of a moderate flature, his wife, without helitation, preferred Swaran, as a more adequate match for her own gigantic fize. From this fatal preference proceeded to much mitchief, that the good poet altegether loft fight of his principal action, and he ends the piece, with advice to men, in the choice of their wives, which, however good it may be, I shall leave concealed in the obscurity of the original.

* The furly attitude of Starno and Swaran is well adapted to their fierce and uncomplying difpolitions. Their characters, at first fight, feen little different; but upon examination, we find that the poet has dexterously diftinguished between them. They were both dark, stubborn, haughty, and referred; but Starno was cunning, revengeful, and cruel, to the highest degree; the disposition of Swaran, though favage, was lefs bloody, and somewhat tinctured with generosity. It is doing injestice to Ossian, to fay, that he has not a great yaricty of characters.

"Annir," faid Starno of lakes, "was a fire that confumed of old. He poured death from his eyes, along the ftriving fields. His joy was in the fall of men. Blood to him was fummer stream, that brings joy to withered vales, from its own mosfly rock. He came forth to the lake Luth-cormo, to meet the tall Corman-trunar, he from Urlor of streams, dweller of battle's wing."

The chief of Urlor had come to Gormal, with his dark-bosomed ships. He saw the daughter of Annir, white-armed Foina-bragâl. He faw her! Nor careless rolled her eyes, on the rider of stormy waves. She sled to his ship in darkness, like a moon-beam thro' a nightly vale. Annir pursued along the deep; he called the winds of heaven. Nor alone was the king! Starno was by his side. Like U-thorno's young eagle, I turned my eyes on my father.

We ruthed into roaring Urlor. With his people came tall Corman-trunar. We fought; but the foe prevailed. In his wrath my father frood. He lopped the young trees, with his fword. His eyes rolled red in his rage. I marked the foul of the king, and I retired in night. From the field I took a broken helmet: a fhield that was pierced with freel; pointlefs was the fpear in my hand. I went to find the foe.

On a rock fat tall Corman-trunar, befide his burning oak; and near him, beneath a tree, fat deep-bosomed Foina-brâgal. I threw my broken shield before her. I spoke the words of peace. Beside his rolling sea, lies Annir of many lakes. The king was pierced in battle; and Starno is to raise his tomb. Me, a son of Loda, he sends to white-handed Foina, to bid her send a lock from her hair, to rest with her father, in earth. And thou king of roaring Urlor, let the battle cease, till Annir receive the fhell, from fiery-eyed Cruth-loda."

C 2

* Bursting into tears, she rose, and tore a lock from her hair; a lock, which wandered, in the blast; along her heaving breast. Corman-trunar gave the shell; and bade me to rejoice before him. I rested in the shade of night; and hid my face in my helmet deep. Sleep descended on the foe. I rose like a stalking ghost. I pierced the side of Corman-trunar. Nor did Foina-bragal escape. She rolled her white-bosom in blood.

Why then, daughter of heroes, didft thou wake my rage?

Morning rofe. The foe were fled, like the departure of mift. Annir ftruck his boffy shield. He called his dark-haired fon. I came, streaked with wandering blood: thrice rose the shout of the king, like the bursting forth of a squall of wind, from a cloud, by night. We rejeiced, three days, above the dead, and called the hawks of leaven. They came, from all the winds, to feast on Annir's foes. Swaran! Fingal is alone; on shi hill of night. Let thy spear pierce the king in fecret; like Annir, my soul shall rejoice.

." Son

Offian is very partial to the fair fex. Even the daughter of the cruel Annir, the fifter of the revengeful and bloody Starno, partakes not of those difagreeable characters so peculiar to her family. She is altogether tender and delicate, Homer, of all ancient poets, uses the fex with least ceremony. His cold contempt is even worse than the downright abuse of the moderns; for to draw abuse implies the possession of some merit.

⁺ Fingal, according to the custom of the Caledonian kings, had retired to a hill alone, as he himfelf was to returne the command of the army the next day. Starno might have fome intelligence of the king's retiring, which occasions his request to Swaran, to stab him; as he forefaw, by his art of divination, that he could not overcome him in open battle.

" Son of Annir," faid Swaran, "I fhall not flav in fhades. I move forth in light: the hawks rush from all their winds. They are wont to trace my course: it is not harmless thro' war."

Burning rose the rage of the king. He thrice raifed his gleaming spear. But, starting, he spared his fon; and rushed into the night. By Turthor's stream a cave is dark, the dwelling of Conbancarglas. There he laid the helmet of kings, and called the maid of Lulan : but the was diftant far, in Loda's refounding hall.

Swelling in his rage, he strode to where Fingal lay alone. The king was laid on his shield, on-his own fecret hill.

Stern hunter of shaggy boars! no feeble maid is laid before thee. No boy, on his ferny bed, by Turthor's murmuring stream. Here is spread the couch of the mighty, from which they rife-to deeds of death! Hunter of shaggy boars awaken not the terrible.

Starno came murmuring on: Fingal arose in arms. "Who art thou, fon of night?" Silent he threw the spear. They mixed their gloomy strife. The shield of Starno fell, cleft in twain. He is bound to an oak. The early beam arose. It was then Fingal beheld the king. He rolled awhile his filent eyes. He thought of other days, when white-bosomed Agandecca moved like the music of songs. He loofed the thong from his hands. Son of Annir, he faid, retire. Retire to Gormal of shells; a beam that was fet returns. I remember thy white-bosomed daughter; dreadful king away! Go to thy troubled dwelling, cloudy foe of the lovely! Let the ftranger fhun thee, thou gloomy in the hall!

A tale of the times of old !

C O M A L A:

Α

DRAMATIC POEM.

ARGUMENT.

This poem is valuable on account of the light it throws on the antiquity of Offian's compositions. The Caracul mentioned here is the fame with Caracalla the fon of Severus. who in the year 211 commanded an expedition against the Caledonians. The variety of the measure shews that the poem was originally fet to music, and perhaps presented before the chiefs upon folemn occasions. Tradition has handed down the ftory more complete than it is in the poem. " Comala, the daughter of Sarno king of Inistore or Orkney iflands, fell in love with Fingal the fon of Comhal at a feast, to which her father had invited him, [Fingal, B. III.] upon his return from Lochlin, after the death of Agandecca. Her paffion was fo violent, that she followed him, difguifed like a youth, who wanted to be employed in his wars. She was foon discovered by Hidallan the fon of Lamor, one of Fingal's heroes, whose love flie had flighted fome time before. Her romantic paffion and beauty recommended her fo much to the king, that he had refolved to make her his wife; when news was brought him of Caracul's expedition. He marched to ftop the progress of the enemy, and Comala attended him. He left her on a hill, within fight of Caracul's army, when he himself went to battle, having previously promifed, if he furvived, to return that night." The fequel of the flory may be guthered from the poem itself.

C O M A L A:

А

DRAMATIC POEM.

The PERSONS.

FINGAL.
FUDALLAN.
COMALA.

Melilcoma, daughters
Dersagrena, of Morm.
Bards.

DERSAGRENA:

THE chace is over. No noise on Ardven but the torrent's roar! Daughter of Morni, come from Crona's banks. Lay down the bow and take the harp. Let the night come on with fongs, let our joy be great on Ardven.

MELLICOMA*. Night comes apace, thou blue-eyed maid! grey night grows dim along the plain. I faw a deer at Crona's fiream; a moffy bank he feemed through the gloom, but foon he bounded away. A meteor played round his branching horns! the awful faces † of other times leoked from the clouds of Crona!

C 5

DERSA-

VIRG.

_____dreadful founds I hear, And the dire form of hostile gods appear.

DRYDEN,

^{*} Melilcoma, -foft-rolling eye.

Apparent diræ facies, inimicaque Trojæ Numina magna deum.

DERSAGRENA*. These are the figure of Fingal's death. The king of shields is fallen! and Caracul prevails. Rife, Comala +, from thy rock; daughter of Sarno, rise in tears! The youth of thy love is low; his ghost is on our hills.

Melilcoma. There Comala fits forlorn! two grey dogs near flake their rough ears, and catch the flying breeze. Her red cheek refts upon her arm, the mountain wind is in her hair. She turns her blue eyes toward the fields of his promife. Where art thou, O Fingal! the night is gathering around.

Comala. O Carun to the streams! why do I behold thy waters rolling in blood? Has the noise of the battle been heard; and sleeps the king of Morven? Rise, moon, thou daughter of the sky? look from between thy clouds, rise that I may behold the gleam of his steel, on the field of his promise. Or rather let the meteor, that lights our fathers through the night, come, with its red beam, to shew me the way to my fallen hero. Who will defend me from forrow? Who from the love of Hidallan? Long shall Comala look before she can behold Fingal in the midst of his host; bright as the coming forth of the morning, in the cloud of an early shower.

HIDAL-

BUCHANAN.

^{*} Dersagrena, the brightness of a sun-bream.
† Comala, the maid of the pleasant brown.

[†] Carun or Cara'on, a winding river.—This river retains fill the name of Carron, and falls into the Forth fome miles to the Forth of Falkirk.

Gentesque alias eum pelleret armis Servitii, bit contenta sitem servaret in usum Servitii, bit contenta suos defendere sines Roma securigeris pratendit mania Scoti: Hie spe progressius posta, Caronis ad undam Terminus Ausonii signat divortia regni.

HIDALLAN *. Dwell thou mist of gloomy Crona, dwell on the path of the king! Hide his iteps from mine eyes, let me remember my friend no more. The bands of battle are scattered, no crowding tread is round the noise of his fteel. O Carun! roll thy streams of blood, the chief of the people is low.

COMALA. Who fell on Carun's founding banks, fon of the cloudy night? Was he white as the fnow of Ardven? Blooming as the bow of the thower? Was his hair like the mift of the hill, foft and curling in the day of the fun? Was he like the thunder of heaven in battle? Fleet as the roe of the defart?

HIDALLAN. O that I might behold his love, fair leaning from her rock! Her red eye dim in tears, her blufhing cheek half hid in her locks! Blow, O gentle breeze! lift thou the heavy locks of the maid, that I may behold her white arm, her lovely cheek in her grief.

COMALA. And is the fon of Comhal fallen, chief of the mournful tale? the thunder rolls on the hill! The lightning flies on wings of fire! They frighten not Comala; for Fingal is low. Say, chief of the mournful tale, fell the breaker of the shields?

HIDALLAN. The nations are feattered on their hills! they fhall hear the voice of the king no more.

COMALA. Confusion pursue thee overthy plains! Ruin overtake thee, thou king of the world! Few be thy fteps to thy grave; and let one virgin mourn thee! Let her be like Comala, tearful in the days of her youth! Why haft thou told me, Hidallan, that my hero fell? I might have hoped a little while his return, I might have thought I faw him on a diffant rock; a tree might have deceived me with his appearance; the wind of the hill might have been the found of his horn in mine ear. O that I were on the banks of Carun! that my tears might be warm on his cheek!

^{*} Hidallan was fent by Fingal to give notice to Comala of his return; he, to revenge himfelf on her for flighting his love fome time before, told her that the king was killed in battle. He even pretended that he carried his body from the field to be buried in her prefence; and this circumstance makes it probable that the poem was prefented of old.

HIDALLAN. He lies not on the banks of Carun; on Ardven heroes raise his tomb. Look on them, O moon! from thy clouds; be thy beam bright on his breast, that Comala may behold him in the light of his armour!

COMALA. Stop, ye fons of the grave, till I behold my love! He left me at the chace alone. I knew not that he went to war. He faid he would return with the night; the king of Morven is returned! Why didft thou not tell me that he would fall, O trembling dweller of the rock *! Thou faweft him in the blood of his youth; but thou didft not tell Comala!

Melilcoma. What found is that on Ardven? Who is that bright in the vale? Who comes like the firength of rivers, when their crowded waters glitter to the moon?

COMALA. Who is it but the foe of Comala, the fon of the king of the world! Ghoft of Fingal! do thou, from thy cloud, direct Comala's bow. Let him fall like the hart of the defart. It is Fingal

^{*} By the dweller of the rock she means a druid. It is probable that some of the order of the druids remained as late as the beginning of the reign of Fingal; and that Comala had consulted one of them concerning the event of the war with Caracul.

Fingal in the crowd of his ghofts. Why doft thou come, my love, to frighten and pleafe my foul?

FINGAL. Raife, ye bards, the fong; raife the wars of the streamy Carun! Caracul has fled from our arms along the fields of his pride. He sets far distant like a meteor, that incloses a spirit of night, when the winds drive it over the heath, and the dark woods are gleaming around. I heard a voice, or was it the breeze of my hills? Is it the huntress of Ardven, the whitehanded daughter of Sarno? Look from thy rocks, my love; let me hear the voice of Comala!

COMALA. Take me to the cave of thy rest,

O lovely fon of death!

FINGAL. Come to the cave of my reft.— The from is part, the fun is on our fields. Come to the cave of my reft, huntrefs of echoing Ardven!

COMALA. He is returned with his fame! I feel the right hand of his wars! But I must rest beside the rock till my soul returns from my fear! O let the harp be near! raise the song, ye daughters of Morni!

Dersagrena. Comala has flain three deer on Ardven, the fire afcends on the rock; go to the feaft of Comala, king of the woody Morven!

FINGAL. Raife, ye fons of fong, the wars of the streamy Carun; that my white-handed maid may rejoice: while I behold the feast of my love.

BARDS. Roll, streamy Carun; roll in joy, the sons of battle sled! The steed is not seen on our fields; the wings * of their pride fpread in other lands. The fun will now rife in peace, and the fhadows defeend in joy. The voice of the chace will be heard; the shields hang in the hall. Our delight will be in the war of the ocean, our hands shall grow red in the blood of Lochlin. Roll, streamy Carun, roll in joy, the sons of battle fled!

Melilcoma. Defeend, ye light mifts from high! Ye moon-beams, lift her foul! Pale lies the maid at the rock! Comala is no more!

FINGAL. Is the daughter of Sarno dead; the white-bofomed maid of my love? Meet me, Comala, on my heaths, when I fit alone at the ftreams of my hills!

HIDALLAN. Ceafed the voice of the huntress of Ardven? Why did I trouble the foul of the maid? When shall I see thee, with joy, in the chace of the dark-brown hinds?

FINGAL. Youth of the gloomy brow! no more shalt thou seast in my halls. Thou shalt not pursue my chace, my foes shall not fall by thy sword †. Lead me to the place of her rest that I may behold her beauty. Pale she lies at the rock, the cold winds lift her hair. Her bowstring sounds in the blast, her arrow was broken in her fall. Raise the praise of the daughter of Sarno! give her name to the winds of heaven!

BARDS. See! meteors gleam around the maid! See! moon-beams lift her foul! Around her, from their clouds, bend the awful faces of her fathers; Sarno ‡ of the gloomy brow! the red-

^{*} Perhaps the poet alludes to the Roman eagle.

[†] The fequel of the story of Hidallan is introduced in another poem.

[‡] Sarno the father of Comala died foon after the flight of his daughter. Fidallan was the first king that reigned in Inistore.

red-rolling eyes of Fidallan! When shall thy white hand arise? When shall thy voice be heard on our rocks? The maids shall seek thee on the heath, but they shall not find thee. Thou shalt come, at times, to their dreams, to fettle peace in their foul. Thy voice shall remain in their ears, they shall think with joy on the dreams of their rest. Meteors gleam around the maid, and moon-beams lift her foul!

CARRIC-THURA:

4

P O E M.

ARGUMENT.

Fingal, returning from an expedition which he had made into the Roman province, refolved to vifit Cathulla king of Inistore, and brother to Comala, whose story is related, at large, in the preceding dramatic poem. Upon his coming in fight of Carric-thura, the palace of Cathulla, he observed a flame on its top, which, in those days, was a figual of diffrefs. The wind drove him intoa bay, at some distance from Carric-thura, and he was obliged to pass the night on the shore. Next day he attacked the army of Frothal king of Sora, who had befieged Cathulla in his palace of Carric-thura, and took Frothal himfelf prifoner, after he had engaged him in a fingle combat. The deliverance of Carric-thura is the fubject of the poem; but feveral other epifodes are interwoven with it. It appears from tradition, that this poem was addressed to a Culdee, or one of the first Christian miffionaries, and that the flory of the Spirit of Loda, supposed to be the ancient Odin of Scandinavia, was introduced by Offian in opposition to the Caldee's doctrine. Be this as it will, it lets us into Offian's notions of a fuperior being; and shews that he was not addicted to the superflition which prevailed all the world over, before the introduction of Christianity.

CARRIC-THURA:

A

P O E M.

HAST* thou left thy blue course in heaven, golden-haired son of the sky! The west has opened its gates; the bed of thy repose is there. The waves come to behold thy beauty. They lift their trembling heads. They see thee, lovely in thy sleep; they shrink away with fear. Rest, in thy shadowy cave, O sun! let thy return be in joy.

But let a thousand lights arise to the sound of the harps of Selma: let the beam spread in the hall, the king of shells is returned! The strife of Carun is past; like sounds that are no more. Raise the song, O bards! the king is returned, with his fame!

Such were the words of Ullin, when Fingal returned from war: when he returned in the fair blufhing of youth, with all his heavy locks. His blue arms were on the hero; like a light cloud on the fun when he moves in his robes of mift, and thews but half his beams. His heroes follow the king:

* The fong of Ullin, with which the poem opens, is in a lyric measure. It was usual with Fingal, when he returned from his expeditions, to fend his bards finging before him. This species of triumph is called, by Oslian, the long of victory.

⁺ Offian has celebrated the firite of Crona, in a particular poem. This poem is connected with it, but it was impossible for the translator to procure that part which relates to Crona, with any degree of purity.

king: the feaft of shells is spread. Fingal turns to his bards, and bids the fong to rife.

Voices of echoing Cona! he faid, O bards of other times! Ye, on whose fouls the blue hosts of our fathers rife! ftrike the harp in my hall; and let me hear the fong. Pleafant is the joy of grief! it is like the shower of spring, when it softens the branch of the oak, and the young leaf rears its green head. Sing on, O bards! to-morrow we lift the fail. My blue course is through the ocean, to Carric-thura's walls; the moffy walls of Sarno, where Comala dwelt. There the noble Cathulla foreads the feaft of shells. The boars of his woods are many; the found of the chace fhall arife!

Cronnan *, fon of the fong! faid Ullin, Midona, graceful at the harp! raife the tale of Shilric, to please the king of Morven. Let Vinvela come in her beauty, like the showery bow, when it shews its lovely head on the lake, and the fetting fun is bright. She comes, O

Fingal! her voice is foft but fad.

VINVELA. My love is a fon of the hill. He purfues the flying deer. His grey dogs are panting around him; his bow-ftring founds in the wind. Dost thou rest by the fount of the rock, or by the noise of the mountain-stream? the rushes are nodding to the wind, the mist flies over the hill. I will approach my love unfeen; I will behold him from the rock. Lovely I haw thee thee first by the aged oak of Branno *; thou wert returning tall from the chace; the fairest among thy friends.

^{*} One should think that the parts of Shilric and Vinvela were reprefented by Cronnan and Minona, whose very names denote that they were fingers, who performed in public-Cronnan figuifies a mournful found, Minona, or Min-'onn, foft air. All the dramatic poems of Offian appear to have been prefented before Fingal, upon folemn occasions.

SHILRIC. What voice is that I hear? that voice like the fummer-wind! I fit not by the nodding rushes; I hear not the fount of the rock. Afar, Vinvela +, afar, I go to the wars of Fingal. My dogs attend me no more. No more I tread the hill. No more from on high I fee thee, fair-moving by the stream of the plain; bright as the bow of heaven; as the moon on the western wave.

VINVELA. Then thou art gone, O Shilric! I am alone on the hill! The deer are feen on the brow; void of fear they graze along. No more they dread the wind; no more the ruftling tree. The hunter is far removed; he is in the field of graves. Strangers! fons of the waves! fpare my lovely Shilric!

SHILRIC. If fall I must in the field, raise high my grave, Vinvela. Grey frones, and heaped-up earth, shall mark me to future times. When the hunter shall fit by the mound, and produce his food at noon, "Some warrior rests here," he will fay; and my fame shall live in his praife. Remember me, Vinvela, when low on earth I lie!

VINVELA. Yes! I will remember thee; alas! mv Shilric will fall! What shall I do, mv love! when thou art for ever gone? Through Bran, or Branno, fignifies a mountain fiream: it is here fome river known by that name, in the days of Offian. There are feveral small rivers in the north of Scotland still retaining the name of Bran; in particular one which falls into the Tay at Dunkeld.

⁺ Bhin bheul, a recman with a melodious voice. Bb in the Galic language has the fame found with the v in English, these hills I will go at noon: I will go through the silent heath. There I will see the place of thy rest, returning from the chace. Alas! my Shilric will fall; but I will remember Shilric.

And I remember the chief, faid the king of woody Morven; he confumed the battle in his rage. But now my eyes behold him not. I met him, one day, on the hill; his cheek was pale; his brow was dark. The figh was frequent in his breaft: his fteps were towards the defart. But now he is not in the crowd of my chiefs, when the founds of my shields arise. Dwells he in the narrow house *, the chief of high Carmora +?

Cronnan! faid Ullin of other times, raise the fong of Shilric; when he returned to his hills, and Vinvela was no more. He leaned on her grey mosfy stone; he thought Vinvela lived. He faw her fair moving ton the plain: but the bright form lafted not: the fun-beam fled from the field, and she was seen no more. Hear the song of Shilric, it is foft but fad!

I fit by the mosly fountain; on the top of the hill of winds. One tree is ruftling above me. Dark waves roll over the heath. The lake is troubled below. The deer defcend from the hill. hunter at a diftance is feen. It is mid-day: but all is filent. Sad are my thoughts alone. Didft thou but appear, O my love! a wanderer on the heath! thy hair floating on the wind behind thee; thy bofom heaving on the fight; thine eyes full of tears for thy friends, whom the mift of the hill had concealed! Thee I would comfort, my love, and bring thee to thy father's house!

* The grave. † Carn-mor, high rocky bill.

The diffinction which the ancient Scots made between good and bad spirits, was, that the former appeared sometimes in the day-time in lonely unfrequented places, but the latter never but by night, and in a difmal gloomy fcene.

But is it she that there appears, like a beam of light on the heath? bright as the moon in autumn. as the fun in a fummer-ftorm, comest thou, O maid, over rocks, over mountains to me? She speaks: but how weak her voice! like the breeze in the reeds of the lake.

"Returnest thou safe from the war? Where are thy friends, my love? I heard of thy death on the hill; I heard and mourned thee, Shilric! Yes, my fair, I return; but I alone of my race. Thou fhalt fee them no more: their graves I raifed on the plain. But why art thou on the defert hill? Why on the heath alone?
"Alone I am, O Shilric! alone in the winter house. With grief for thee I fell. Shilric,

I am pale in the tomb."

She fleets, the fails away; as mift before the wind! And, wilt thou not ftay, Vinvela? Stay and behold my tears! fair thou appeareft, Vinvela! fair thou waft, when alive!

By the mosly fountain I will sit; on the top of the hill of winds. When mid-day is filent around, O talk with me, Vinvela! come on the lightwinged gale! on the breeze of the defart, come! Let me hear thy voice, as thou paffeft, when mid-day is filent around!

Such was the fong of Cronnan, on the night of Selma's joy. But morning rofe in the eaft; the blue waters rolled in light. Fingal bade his fails to rife; the winds came ruftling from their hills. Iniffore rose to fight, and Carricthura's mosly towers! But the sign of distress was on their top: the warning flame edged with fmoke. The king of Morven struck his breast: he affumed, at once, his spear. His darkened brow brow bends forward to the coast: he looks back to the lagging winds. His hair is disordered on his back. The filence of the king is terrible!

Night came down on the fea; Rotha's bay received the ship. A rock bends along the coast with all its echoing wood. On the top is the circle * of Loda, the mosfly stone of power! A narrow plain spreads beneath, covered with grass and aged trees, which the midnight winds, in their wrath, had torn from the shaggy rock. The blue course of a stream is there! the lonely blast of ocean pursues the thistie's beard. The slame of three oaks arose: the feast is spread around: but the foul of the king is fad, for Carric-thura's Chief distrest.

The wan, cold moon rofe, in the east. Sleep descended on the youths! Their blue helmets glitter to the beam; the fading fire decays. But sleep did not rest on the king: he rose in the midst of his arms, and slowly ascended the hill, to behold the slame of Sarno's tower.

The flame was dim and diffant; the moon hid her red face in the east. A blast came from the mountain, on its wings was the spirit of Loda. He came to his place in his terrors +, and shook his dusky spear. His eyes appear like flames in his dark face; his voice is like distant thunder. Fingal advanced his spear in night, and raised his voice on high.

Son of night, retire: call thy winds, and fly! Why doft thou come to my prefence, with thy fhadowy arms? Do I fear thy gloomy form, fpirit

+ He is described, in a simile, in the poem concerning the death of Cuchullin,

^{*} The circle of Loda is supposed to be a place of worship among the Scandinavians, as the spirit of Loda is thought to be the same with their god Odin.

rit of difmal Loda? Weak is thy shield of clouds: feeble is that meteor, thy fword! The blaft rolls them together; and thou thyfelf art loft. Fly from my presence, son of night! call thy winds and fly!

Dost thou force me from my place, replied the hollow voice? The people bend before me. turn the battle in the field of the brave. I look on the nations, and they vanish: my nostrils pour the blaft of death. I come abroad on the winds: the tempests are before my face. But my dwelling is calm, above the clouds; the fields of my rest are pleafant.

Dwell in thy pleafant fields, faid the king: Let Comhal's fon be forgot. Do my steps ascend, from my hills, into thy peaceful plains? Do I meet thee, with a spear, on thy cloud, spirit of dismal Loda? Why then dost thou frown on me? why fhake thine airy fpear? Thou frownest in vain: I never fled from the mighty in war. And shall the fons of the wind frighten the king of Morven? No: he knows the weakness of their arms!

Fly to thy land, replied the form: receive the wind, and fly! The blafts are in the hollow of my hand: the course of the storm is mine. The king of Sora is my fon, he bends at the stone of my power. His battle is around Carric-thura; and he will prevail! Fly to thy land, fon of Cromhal, or feel my flaming wrath!

He lifted high his shadowy spear! He bent forward his dreadful height. Fingal, advancing, drew his fword; the blade of dark-brown Luno *. The gleaming path of the fteel winds VOL. I.

^{*} The famous fword of Fingal, made by Lun, or Luno, a fmith of Lochlin.

thro' the gloomy ghost. The form fell shapeless into air, like a column of simoke, which the staff of the boy disturbs, as it rifes from the half extinguished furnace.

The fpirit of Loda shrieked, as, rolled into himself, he rose on the wind. Inistore shook at the sound. The waves heard it on the deep. They stopped, in their course, with sear: the friends of Fingal started, at once; and took their heavy spears. They missed the king: they rose in rage; all their arms resound!

The moon came forth in the east. Fingal returned in the gleam of his arms. The joy of his youth was great, their fouls fettled, as a fea from a ftorm. Ullin raifed the fong of gladness. The hills of Inistore rejoiced. The flame of the oak arose; and the tales of heroes are told.

But Frothal, Sora's wrathful king, fits in fadness beneath a tree. The hoft spreads around Carrie-thura. He looks towards the walls with rage. He longs for the blood of Cathulla, who, once, overcame him in war. When Annir reigned * in Sora, the father of sea-borne Frothal, a storm arose on the sea, and carried Frothal to Inistore. Three days he feasted in Sarno's halls, and saw the flow rolling eyes of Comala. He loved her, in the slame of youth, and rushed to seize the white-armed maid. Cathulla met the chief. The gloomy battle rose. Frothal was bound in the hall; three days he pined alone. On the fourth, Sarno sent him to his ship, and he returned to his land. But wrath darkened in his soul against the noble Cathulla. When Annir's [&]quot;Annir was also the father of Erragon, who was king after the death of his brother Frothal. The death of Erragon is the subject of the battle of Lora, a poem in this collection.

thir's frome * of fame arose, Frothal came in his strength. The battle burned round Carric-thura, and Sarno's mostly walls.

Morning rose on Inistore. Frothal struck his dark-brown shield. His chiefs started at the found; they stood, but their eyes were turned to the sea. They saw Fingal coming in his strength; and sirst the neble Thubar speke. "Who comes like the stag of the desart, with all his herd behind him? Frothal, it is a see! I see his forward spear. Perhaps it is the king of Morven, Fingal the first of men. His deeds are well known in Lochlin: the blood of his foes is in Sarno's halls. Shall I ask the peace + of kings? His sword is the bolt of heaven!"

Son of the feeble hand, faid Frothal, shall my days begin in a cloud? Shall I yield before I have conquered, chief of fireamy Tora? The people would say in Sora, Frothal flew forth like a meteor; but a darkness has met him; and his same is no more. No: Thubar, I will never yield; my same shall furround me like light. No: I will never yield, chief of streamy Tora!

He went forth with the stream of his people, but they met a rock: Fingal stood unmoved, broken they rolled back from his side. Nor did they safely sly; the spear of the king pursued their steps. The field is covered with heroes.

A rifing hill preferved the foe.

Frothal faw their flight. The rage of his bofom rofe. He bent his eyes to the ground, and called the noble Thubar. Thubar! my people are fled. My fame has ceased to arise. I will D 2

That is, after the death of Annir. To erect the stone of one's fame, was, in other words, to say that the person was dead.

[†] Honourable terms of peace.

fight the king; I feel my burning foul! Send a bard to demand the combat. Speak not against Frothal's words! But, Thubar! I love a maid; she dwells by Thano's stream, the white-bosomed daughter of Herman, Utha with fost-rolling eyes. She feared the low-laid Comála; her secret sighs rose, when I spread the fail. Tell to Utha of harps, that my foul delighted in her!

Such were his words, refolved to fight. The foft figh of Utha was near! She had followed her hero, in the armour of a man. She rolled her eye on the youth, in fecret, from beneath her feel. She faw the bard as he went; the fpear fell thrice from her hand! Her loofe hair flew on the wind. Her white breaft rofe, with fighs. She raifed her eyes to the king. She would fpeak, but thrice she failed.

Fingal heard the words of the bard; he came in the ftrength of his fteel. They mixed their deathful fpears: They raifed the gleam of their arms. But the fword of Fingal defcended and cut Frothal's fhield in twain. His fair fide is exposed; half bent he foresees his death. Darkness gathered on Utha's soul. The tear rolled down her cheek. She rushed to cover the chief with her shield; but a fallen oak met her steps. She fell on her arm of snow; her shield, her helmet slew wide. Her white bosom heaved to the fight; her dark-brown hair is spread on earth.

Fingal pitied the white-armed maid! he ftayed the uplifted fword. The tear was in the eye of the king, as, bending forward, he fpoke. "King of ftreamy Sora! fear not the fword of Fingal. It was never ftained with the blood of the vanquifhed; it never pierced a fallen foe. Let thy people rejoice by thy native ftreams. Let the maids of thy love be glad. Why shouldest thou fall in thy youth, king of ftreamy Sora?" Frothal heard the words of Fingal, and faw the rifing maid: they * ftood in filence, in their beauty: like two young trees of the plain, when the fhower of fpring is on their leaves, and the loud winds are laid.

fall

Daughter of Herman, faid Frothal, didft thou come from Tora's ftreams; didft thou come, in thy beauty, to behold thy warrior low? But he was low before the mighty, maid of the flow-rolling eye! The feeble did not overcome the fon of car-borne Annir! Terrible art thou, O king of Morven! in battles of the fpear. But, in peace, thou art like the fun, when he looks thro' a filent fhower: the flowers lift their fair heads before him; the gales shake their rustling wings. O that thou wert in Sora! that my feast were fpread! The future kings of Sora would see thy arms and rejoice. They would rejoice at the fame of their fathers, who beheld the mighty Fingal!

Son of Anni, replied the king, the fame of Sora's race thall be heard! When chiefs are ftrong in war, then does the fong arife! But if their fwords are ftretched over the feeble: if the blood of the weak has ftained their arms; the bard shall forget them in the fong, and their tombs shall not be known. The stranger shall come and build there, and remove the heaped-up earth. An half-worn sword shall rife before him; bending above it, he will fay, "These are the arms of the chiefs of old, but their names are not in fong." Come thou, O Frothal! to the feast of Inistore; let the maid of thy love be there; let our faces brighten with joy!

D 3 Fingal

^{*} Frothel and Utha,

Fingal took his fpear, moving in the fteps of his might. The gates of Carric-thura are opened wide. The feaft of fhells is fpread. The foft found of music arofe. Gladness brightened in the hall. The voice of Ullin was heard; the harp of Selma was strung. Utha rejoiced in his presence, and demanded the song of grief; the big tear hung in her eye, when the soft * Crimora spoke. Crimora the daughter of Rinval, who dwelt at Lotha's † roaring stream! The tale was long, but lovely; and pleased the blushing Utha.

CRIMORA ‡. Who cometh from the hill, like a cloud tinged with the beam of the west? Whose voice is that, loud as the wind, but pleafant as the harp of Carril ||? It is my love in the light of steel; but sad is his darkened brow! Live the mighty race of Fingal? or what darkens in Connal's foul §?

CONNAL. They live. They return from the chace, like a ftream of light. The fun is on their fhields. Like a ridge of fire they defcend the hill. Loud is the voice of the youth! the war, my love, is near! To-morrow the dreadful Dargo

nurge

* There is a propriety in introducing this epifode, as the fituations of Crimora and Utha were fo fimilar.

† Lotha was the ancient name of one of the great rivers in the north of Scotland. The only one of them that fill recains a name of a like found is Lochy, in Invernefshire: but whether it is the river mentioned here, the translator will not pretend to fay.

† Cri-móra, a woman of a great foul.

|| Perhaps the Carril mentioned here is the same with Carril the son of Kinsena, Cuchullin's bard. The name itself is proper to any bard, as it signifies a sprightly and harmonious sound.

S Cannal, the fon of Diaran, was one of the most famous heroes of Fingal; he was slain in a battle against Dargo a Briton; but whether by the hand of the enemy, or that of his milites, tradition does not determine.

Dargo comes to try the force of our race. The race of Fingal he defies; the race of battle and wounds!

CRIMORA. Connal, I faw his fails like grey mift on the dark-brown wave. They flowly came to land. Connal, many are the warriors of Dargo!

CONNAL. Bring me thy father's shield; the boffy, iron shield of Rinval; that shield like the full-orbed moon, when she moves darkened through heaven.

CRIMORA. That shield I bring, O Connal! but it did not defend my father. By the spear of Gormar he fell. Thou may'st fall, O Connal!

CONNAL. Fall I may! But raise my tomb, Crimora! Grey stones, a mound of earth, shall fend my name to other times. Bend thy red eye over my grave, beat thy mournful heaving breast. Though fair thou art, my love, as the light; more pleasant than the gale of the hill; yet I will not here remain. Raise my tomb, Crimora?

CRIMORA. Then give me those arms that gleam; that sword, and that spear of steel. I shall meet Dargo with Connal, and aid him in the fight. Farewel, ye rocks of Ardven! ye deer! and ye streams of the hill! We shall return no more. Our tombs are distant far!

"And did they return no more?" faid Utha's bursting figh. "Fell the mighty in battle, and did Crimora live? Her steps were lonely; her foul was fad for Connal. Was he not young and lovely; like the beam of the fetting fun?" Ullin faw the virgin's tears, he took the foftly-trembling harp: the song was lovely, but fad, and silence was in Carrie-thura.

Autumn is dark on the mountains; grey mist rests on the hills. The whirlwind is heard on the heath. Dark rolls the river through the narnarrow plain. A tree stands alone on the hill, and marks the slumbering Connal. The leaves whirl round with the wind, and strew the grave of the dead. At times are seen here the ghosts of the departed, when the musing hunter alone stalks slowly over the heath.

Who can reach the fource of thy race, O Connal! who recount thy fathers? Thy family grew like an oak on the mountain, which meeteth the wind with its lofty head. But now it is torn from the earth. Who fhall fupply the place of Connal? Here was the din of arms; here the groans of the dying. Bloody are the wars of Fingal, O Connal! it was here thou didst fall. Thine arm was like a ftorm; thy fword a beam of the fky; thy height, a rock on the plain; thine eyes a furnace of fire. Louder than a ftorm was thy voice, in the battles of thy steel. Warriors fell by thy fword, as the thiftle by the staff of 2 boy. Dargo the mighty came on, darkening in his rage. His brows were gathered into wrath. His eyes like two caves in a rock. Bright rofe their fwords on each fide; loud was the clang of their fleel.

The dangliter of Rinval was near; Crimora bright in the armour of man; her yellow hair is loofe behind, her bow is in her hand. She followed the youth to the war, Connal her mucheloved. She drew the firing on Dargo; but cring fhe pierced her Connal. He falls like an oak on the plain; like a rock from the fhaggy hill. What shall she do, haples maid! He bleeds; her Connal dies! All the night long she cries, and all the day, "O Connal, my love, and my friend!" With grief the fad mourner dies! Larth here incloses the lovelieft pair on the fill.

The grafs grows between the stones of the tomb; I often sit in the mournful shade. The wind sighs through the grafs; their memory rushes on my mind. Undisturbed you now sleep together; in the tomb of the mountain you rest alone!

And foft be their reft, faid Utha, haplefs children of ftreamy Lotha! I will remember them with tears, and my fecret fong flull rife; when the wind is in the groves of Tora, when the ftream is roaring near. Then fhall they come on my foul, with all their lovely grief!

Three days feafted the kings: on the fourth their white fails arofe. The winds of the north drove Fingal to Morren's woody land. But the fpirit of Loda fat, in his cloud, behind the fhips of Frothal. He hung forward with all his blafts, and fpread the white-bofomed fails. The wounds of his form were not forgot; he ftill feared * the hand of the king!

^{*} The flory of Fingal and the spirit of Loda, supposed to be the samous Odin, is the most extravagant sisting in all Offian's poems. It is not, however, without precedents in the best poets; and it must be said for Offian, that he says nothing but what perfectly agreed with the notions of the times, concerning ghosts. They thought the souls of the dead were material, and consequently suspended by the suspended by th

C A R T H O N:

A

P. O E M.

ARGUMENT.

This poem is complete, and the subject of it, as of most of Osfian's compositions, tragical. In the time of Comhal the fon of Trathal, and father of the celebrated Fingal, Clessammor the fon of Thaddu and brother of Morna, Fingal's mother, was driven by a ftorm into the river Clyde, on the banks of which flood Balclutha, a town belonging to the Britons between the walls. He was hospitably received by Reuthámir, the principal man in the place, who gave him Moina his only daughter in marriage. Reuda, the fon of Cormo, a Briton who was in love with Moina, came to Reuthamir's house, and behaved haughtily towards Clessammor. A quarrel enfued, in which Reuda was killed : the Britons who attended him, pressed so hard on Clessammor, that he was obliged to throw himself into the Clyde, and fwim to his ship. He hoisted fail, and the wind being favourable, bore him out to fea. He often endeavoured to return, and carry off his beloved Moina by night; but the wind continuing contrary, he was forced to defift.

Moina who had been left with child by her hufband. brought forth a fon, and died foon after .- Reuthamir named the child Carthon, i. e. the murmur of waves, from the storm which carried off Clessámmor his father, who was supposed to have been cast away. When Carthon was three years old, Comhal the father of Fingal, in one of his expeditions against the Britons, took and burnt Balclutha. Reuthámir was killed in the attack: and Carthon was carried fafe away by his nurse, who fled farther into the country of the Britons. Carthon, coming to a man's estate, was refolved to revenge the fall of Balclutha on Comhal's posterity. He fet fail, from the Clyde, and, falling on the coast of Morven, defeated two of Fingal's heroes, who came to oppose his progress. He was, at last, unwittingly killed by his father Clefsammor, in a fingle combat. This ftory is the foundation of the prefent poem, which opens on the night preceding the death of Carthon, fo that what paffed before is introduced by way of epifode. The poem is addreffed to Malving the daughter of Tofcar.

CARTHON:

A

P O E M.

 ${f A}$ TALE of the times of old! The deeds of days of other years !

The murmur of thy streams, O Lora! brings back the memory of the past. The sound of thy woods, Garmallar, is lovely in mine car. Dost thou not behold, Malvina, a rock with its head of heath? Three aged pines bend from its face; green is the narrow plain at its feet; there the flower of the mountain grows, and shakes its white head in the breeze. The thistle is there alone, shedding its aged beard. Two stones, half sunk in the ground, shew their heads of moss. The deer of the mountain avoids the place, for he beholds a dim ghost standing there *. The mighty lie, O Malvina! in the narrow plain of the rock.

A Tale of the times of old! the deeds of days of other years!

Who comes from the land of ftrangers, with his thousands around him? the fun-beam pours its bright stream before him; his hair meets the wind of his hills. His face is settled from war.

He

It was the opinion of the times, that deer faw the ghofts of the dead. To this day, when heafts fuddenly flart without any apparent cause, the vulgar think that they see the spirits of the deceased.

He is calm as the evening beam that looks, from the cloud of the weft, on Cona's filent vale. Who is it but Comhal's fon *, the king of mighty deeds! He beholds his hills with joy, he bids a thoufand voices rife. "Ye have fled over your fields, ye fons of the diftant land! The king of the world fits in his half, and hears of his people's flight. He lifts his red eye of pride: he takes his father's fword. Ye have fled over your fields, fons of the diftant land!"

Such were the words of the bards, when they came to Selma's halls. A thousand lights + from the ftranger's land rose, in the midst of the people. The feast is spread around; the night passed away in joy. Where is the noble Clessammort, said the fair-haired Fingal? Where is the brother of Morna, in the hour of my joy? Sullen and dark he passes his days in the vale of echoing Lora: but, behold, he comes from the hill, like a steed in his strength, who finds his companions in the breeze; and tosses his bright mane in the wind. Blest be the soul of Clessammor, why so long from Selma?

Returns the chief, faid Clefsámmor, in the midst of his fame? Such was the renown of Comhal in the battles of his youth. Often did we pass over Carun to the land of the strangers: our swords returned, not unstained with blood: nor did the kings of the world rejoice. Why do I remember the times of our war? My hair is mixed with grey. My hand forgets to bend the bow:

I lift

† Probably wax-lights; which are often mentioned as carried, among other booty, from the Roman province.

1 Cleffamh mor, mighty deeds.

[•] Fingal returns here, from an expedition against the Romans, which was celebrated by Ossian in a poem called the strife of Crona.

I lift a lighter spear. O that my joy would return, as when I first beheld the maid; the whitebosomed daughter of strangers, Moina *, with the dark-blue eyes!

Tell, faid the mighty Fingal, the tale of thy youthful days. Sorrow, like a cloud on the fun, shades the foul of Clessammor. Mournful are thy thoughts, alone, on the banks of the roaring Lora. Let us hear the forrow of thy youth and the darkness of thy days!

"It was in the days of peace," replied the great Clessámmor, "I came, in my bounding ship, to Balclutha's + walls of towers. The winds had roared behind my fails, and Clutha's t streams received my dark-bosomed ship. Three days I remained in Reuthamir's halls, and faw his daughter, that beam of light. The joy of the shell went round, and the aged hero gave the fair. Her breafts were like foam on the wave, and her eyes like ftars of light: her hair was dark as the raven's wing: her foul was generous and mild. My love for Moina was great: my heart poured forth in joy..

"The fon of a stranger came; a chief who loved the white-bosomed Moina. His words were mighty in the hall; he often half-unsheathed his fword. Where, faid he, is the mighty Comhal, the

reftlefs

^{*} Moina, foft in temper and perfon. We find the British names in this poem derived from the Galic, which is a proof that the ancient language of the whole island was one and the fame.

⁺ Balclutha, i. e. the town of Clyde, probably the Alcluth of the Clutha, or Cluath, the Galic name of the river Clyde, the fignification of the word is bending, in allufion to the winding course of that river. From Clutha is derived its Latin name, Glotta, reftlefs wanderer * of the heath? Comes he, with his hoft, to Balclutha, fince Clefsammor is fo bold? My foul, I replied, O warrior! burns in a light of its own. I stand without fear in the midft of thousands, though the valiant are distant far. Stranger! thy words are mighty, for Clefsammor is alone. But my fword trembles by my fide, and longs to glitter in my hand. Speak no more of Comhal, fon of the winding Clutha !" "The strength of his pride arose. We fought; he fell beneath my fword. The banks of Clutha heard his fall; a thousand spears glittered around. I fought: the strangers prevailed: I plunged into the stream of Clutha. My white fails rose over the waves, and I bounded on the dark-blue fea. Moina came to the shore, and rolled the red eve of her tears: her loofe hair flew on the wind; and I heard her mournful, distant cries. Often did I turn my ship; but the winds of the East prevailed. Nor Clutha ever fince have I feen, nor Moina of the dark brown hair. She fell in Balclutha, for I have feen her ghoft. I knew her as the came through the dufky night, along the murmur of Lora: the was like the new moon, feen through the gathered mift: when the fky pours down its flaky fnow, and the world is filent and dark."

Raife +, ye bards, faid the mighty Fingal, the praife of unhappy Moina. Call her ghost, with your.

The word in the original here rendered by reflefs wanderer is Stata, which is the true origin of the Stoti of the Romans; an opprobrious name imposed by the Britons, on the Caledonians, on account of the continual incursions into their country.

[†] The title of this poem, in the original, is Doan na nleat, i. c. The Poem of the Hymns: probably on account of its many digrefilons from the fubject, all which are in a lyric measure, as this fong of Fingal. Fingal is celebrated by the Irith hitto-rians your fongs, to our hills; that fhe may rest with the fair of Morven, the fun-beams of other days, the delight of heroes of old. I have feen the walls of Balclutha, but they were defolate. 'The fire had refounded in the halls : and the voice of the people is heard no more. The stream of Clutha was removed from its place, by the fall of the walls. The thiftle shook, there, its lonely head: the moss whistled to the wind. The fox looked out from the windows, the rank grafs of the wall waved round its head. Defolate is the dwelling of Moina, filence is in the house of her fathers. Raife the fong of mourning, O bards ! over the land of strangers. They have but fallen before us: for, one day, we must fall. Why doft thou build the hall, fon of the winged days? Thou lookest from thy towers to-day; yet a few years, and the blaft of the defart comes; it howls in thy empty court, and whiftles round thy halfworn shield. And let the blast of the defart come! we shall be renowned in our day! The mark of my arm shall be in battle; my name in the fong of bards. Raife the fong; fend round the shell: let joy be heard in my hall. When thou, fun of heaven, shalt fail! if thou shalt fail, thou mighty light! if thy brightness is for a seafon, like Fingal; our fame shall furvive thy beams!

Such was the fong of Fingal, in the day of his joy. His thousand bards leaned forward from their feats, to hear the voice of the king. It was like the music of harps on the gale of the spring. Lovely were thy thoughts, O Fingal! why had rians for his wisdom in making laws, his poetical genius, and his foreknowledge of events. O'Flaherty goes so far as to say, that Fingal's laws were extant in his own time. not Offian the strength of thy foul? But they standest alone, my father! who can equal the king of Selma?

The night passed away in fong; morning returned in joy. The mountains shewed their grey heads; the blue face of ocean smiled. The white wave is seen tumbling round the distant rock; a mist rose, slowly, from the lake. It came, in the figure of an aged man, along the silent plain. Its large limbs did not move in steps; for a ghost supported it in mid air. It came towards Selma's hall, and dissolved in a shower of blood.

The king alone beheld the fight; he forefaw the death of the people. He came, in filence, to his hall; and took his father's spear. The mail rattled on his breast. The heroes rose around. They looked, in filence, on each other, marking the eyes of Fingal. They saw battle in his face: the death of armies on his spear. A thousand shields, at once, are placed on their arms; they drew a thousand swords. The hall of Selma brightened around. The clang of arms ascends. They grey dogs howl in their place. No word is among the mighty chiefs. Each marked the eyes of the king; and half assumed his spear.

Sons of Morven, begun the king, this is no time to fill the shell. The battle darkens near us; death hovers over the land. Some ghost, the friend of Fingal, has forewarned us of the foe. The sons of the stranger come from the darkly-rolling sea. For, from the water, came the sign of Morven's gloomy danger. Let each assume his heavy spear, each gird on his father's sword. Let the dark helmet rise on every head; the mail pour its lightning from every fide. The battle gathers like a itorm; foon shall ye hear the roar of death.

The hero moved on before his hoft, like a cloud before a ridge of green fire; when it pours on the fky of night, and mariners forefee a from. On Cona's rifing heath they ftood: the white-bofomed maids beheld them above like a grove; they forefaw the death of the youth, and looked towards the fea with fear. The white wave deceived them for diffant fails; the tear is on their cheek! The fun rofe our the fea, and we beheld a diffant fleet. Like the mift of ocean they came: and poured their youth upon the coaft. The chief was among them, like the ftag in the midft of the herd. His shield is studded with gold; stately strode the king of spears. He moved towards Selma; his-thousands moved behind.

Go, with a fong of peace, faid Fingal; go, Ullin, to the king of fwords. Tell him that we are mighty in war; that the ghofts of our foes are many. But renowned are they who have feafted in my halls! they fhew the arms * of my fathers in a foreign land: the fons of the ftrangers wonder, and blefs the friends of Morven's race; for our names have been heard afar: the kings of the world fhook in the midft of their hoft.

Ullin went with his fong. Fingal refted on his spear: he saw the mighty soe in his armour: he bleft the stranger's son. "How stately art thou, thou, fon of the fea! faid 'the king of woody. Morven. Thy fword is a beam of fire by thy fide: thy fipear is a pine that defies the ftorm. The varied face of the moon is not broader than thy fhield. Ruddy is thy face of youth! foft the ringlets of thy hair! But this tree may fall; and his memory be forgot! The daughter of the ftranger will be fad, looking to the rolling fea: the children will fay, "We fee a fhip; perhaps is is the king of Balclutha." The tear ftarts from their mother's eye. Her thoughts are of him who fleeps in Morven!"

^{*} It was a cuftom among the ancient Scots, to exchange arms with their guelts, and those arms were preserved long in the different families, as monuments of the friendship which subfilted between their ancestors.

Such were the words of the king, when Ullin came to the mighty Carthon; he threw down the spear before him; he raised the song of peace. "Come to the feast of Fingal, Carthon, from the rolling sea! partake of the seas of our king, or lift the spear of war! The ghosts of our spear many: but renowned are the friends of Morven! Behold that sield, O Carthon; many a green hill rises there, with mostly stones and rustling grafs; these are the tombs of Fingal's foes, the fons of the rolling fea!"

"Doft thou fpeak to the weak in arms!" faid Carthon, "bard of the woody Morven? Is my face pale for fear, fon of the peaceful fong? Why, then, doft thou think to darken my foul with the tales of those who fell? My arm has fought in battle; my renown is known afar. Go to the feeble in arms, bid them yield to Fingal. Have not I feen the fallen Balclutha? And shall I feast with Comhal's fon? Comhal! who threw his fire in the midst of my father's hall! I was young, and knew not the cause, why the virgins wept. The columns of smoke pleased mine eye, when they rose above my walls! I often looked back, with gladness, when my friends fled along the hill. But when the years of my youth came on, I beheld the moss of my fallen walls: my figh arose with the morning, and my tears descended with night. Shall I not flight, I said to my foul, against the children of my foes? And I will fight, O bard! I feel the strength of my foul."

His people gathered around the hero, and drew, at once, their finning fwords. He ftands, in the midft, like a pillar of fire; the tear half-ftarting from his eye; for he thought of the fallen Balclutha; the crowded pride of his foul arofe. Sidelong he looked up to the hill, where our heroes shone in arms; the spear trembled in his hand: bending forward, he seemed to threaten the king.

Shall I, faid Fingal to his foul, meet, at once, the youth? Shall I ftop him, in the midft of his course, before his fame shall arise? But the bard, hereaster, may say, when he sees the tomb of Carthon: Fingal took his thousands to battle, before the noble Carthon sell. No: bard of the times to come! thou shalt not lessen Fingal's same. My heroes will sight the youth, and Fingal behold the war. If he overcomes, I rush, in my strength, like the roaring stream of Cona. Who, of my chiefs, will meet the son of the rolling sea? Many are his warriors on the coast: and strong is his ashen spear!

Cathul * rose, in his strength, the son of the mighty Lormar: three hundred youths attend

the

the chief, the race + of his native ftreams. Feeble was his arm against Carthon, he fell; and his heroes fled. Connal ‡ refumed the battle, but he broke his heavy fpear: he lay bound on the field: Carthon purfued his people.

Clessammor! faid the king | of Morven, where is the fpear of thy ftrength? Wilt thou behold Connal bound; thy friend, at the stream of Lora? Rife, in the light of thy fteel, comranion of valiant Comhal! Let the youth of Balclutha feel the strength of Morven's race. He rose in the strength of his steel, shaking his grizly locks. He fitted the flield to his fide; he rushed, in the pride of valour.

Carthon stood on a rock; he faw the hero rufhing on. He loved the dreadful joy of his face: his strength, in the locks of age! " Shall I lift that fpear, he faid, that never strikes, but once, a foe? Or shall I, with the words of peace, preferve the warrior's life? Stately are his fteps of age! lovely the remnant of his years! Perhaps it is the husband of Moina; the father of car-borne Carthon. Often have I heard, that he dwelt at the echoing stream of Lora."

Such were his words, when Clefsammor came, and lifted high his fpear. The youth received it on his shield, and spoke the words of peace. " Warrior of the aged locks! Is there no youth to lift the spear? Hast thou no son, to raise the shield

before

|| Fingal did not then know that Carthon was the fon of Clefsámmor.

[†] It appears, from this passage, that clanship was esta-blished, in the days of Fingal, though not on the same sooting with the prefent tribes in the north of Scotland.

This Connal is very much celebrated, in ancient poetry, for his wifdom and valour: there is a fmall tribe ftill fublifting, in the North, who pretend they are defcended from him.

before his father, to meet the arm of youth? Is the fpouse of thy love no more? or weeps she ever the tombs of thy sons? Art thou of the kings of men? What will be the same of my fword should'st thou sall?

It will be great, thou fon of pride! begun the tall Clefsámmor. I have been renowned in battle; but I never told my name * to a foe. Yield to me, fon of the wave, then fhalt thou know, that the mark of my fword is in many a field. I never yielded, king of fpears! replied the noble pride of Carthon: I have also fought in war; I behold my future fame. Despife me not, thou chief-of men! my arm, my spear is ftrong. Retire among thy friends, let younger heroes fight." Why dost thou wound my soul? replied Clefsámmor with a tear. Age does not tremble on my hand; I still can lift the fword. Shall I sly in Fingal's fight; in the fight of him I love? Son of the fea! I never fled: exalt thy pointed spear.

They fought, like two contending winds, that strive to roll the wave. Carthon bade his spear to err; he still thought that the foe was the spouse of Moina. He broke Clessammor's beamy spear in twain: he spized his shining sword. But as Carthon was binding the chief; the chief drew the dagger of his fathers. He saw the soe's uncovered side; and opened, there, a wound.

Fingal

^{*} To tell one's name to an enemy was reckoned, in those days of heroifm, a manifest evasion of fighting him; for if it was once known, that friendhip jubisfied, of old, between the ancestors of the combatants, the battle immediately ceased; and the ancient amity of their foresathers was renewed. A man who tells his name to his enemy, was of old an ignominious term for a coward.

Fingal faw Clefsámmor low: he moved in the found of his fteel. The host stood filent, in his prefence; they turned their eves to the king. He came, like the fullen noise of a storm, before the winds arise: the hunter hears it in the vale, and retires to the cave of the rock. Carthon stood in his place: the blood is rushing down his fide: he saw the coming down of the king; his hopes of fame arose *; but pale was his cheek: his hair flew loofe, his helmet shook on high: the force of Carthon failed; but his foul was ftrong.

Fingal beheld the hero's blood; he ftopt the uplifted spear. "Yield, king of swords! said Comhal's son; I behold thy blood. Thou hast been mighty in battle; and thy fame shall never fade." "Art thou the king fo far renowned, replied the car-borne Carthon? Art thou that light of death, that frightens the kings of the world? But why should Carthon ask? for he is like the stream of his hills; strong as a river, in his course: fwift as the eagle of heaven. O that I had fought with the king; that my fame might be great in fong! that the hunter, beholding my tomb, might fay, he fought with the mighty Fingal. But Carthon dies unknown; he has poured out his force on the weak."

But thou fhalt not die unknown, replied the king of woody Morven: my bards are many, O Carthon! their fongs defcend to future times. The children of years to come shall hear the same of Carthon; when they fit round the burning oak

^{*} This expression admits of a double meaning, either that Carthon hoped to acquire glory by killing Fingal; or to be rendered famous by falling by his hand. The last is the most probable, as Carthon is already wounded.

cak*, and the night is fpent in fongs of old. The hunter, fitting in the heath, shall hear the rustling blast; and, raising his eyes, behold the rock where Carthon fell. He shall turn to his fon, and shew the place where the mighty fought. "There the king of Balclutha fought, like the ftrength of a thousand streams."

Joy rose in Carthon's face: he listed his heavy eyes. He gave his sword to Fingal, to lie within his hall, that the memory of Balclutha's king might remain in Morven. The battle ceased along the field, the bard had sing the song of peace. The chiefs gathered round the falling Carthon; they heard his words, with sighs. Silent they leaned on their spears, while Balclutha's hero spoke. His hair sighed in the wind, and his voice was sad and low.

"King of Morven, Carthon faid, I fall in the midst of my course. A foreign tomb receives, in youth, the last of Reuthamir's race. Darkness dwells in Balclutha: the shadows of grief in Crathmo. But raise my remembrance on the banks of Lora: where my fathers dwelt. Perhaps the husband of Moina will mourn over his fallen Carthon." His words reached the heart of Clessammor: he fell, in silence, on his son. The host stood darkened around: no voice is on the plain. Night came, the moon, from the east, looked on the mournful field: but still they stood, like a silent grove that lifts its head on Gormal, when the loud winds are laid, and dark autumn is on the plain.

Three days they mourned above Carthon; on the fourth his father died. In the narrow plain Vol. I. E of the rock they lie; a dim ghoft defends their tomb. There lovely Moina is often feen; when the fun-beam darts on the rock, and all around is dark. There she is feen, Malvina! but not like the daughters of the hill. Her robes are from the stranger's land; and she is still alone!

^{*} In the north of Scotland, till very lately, they burnt a large trunk of an oak at their felfivals; it was called the trunk of the feaft. Time had so much conserrated the custom, that the vulgar thought it a kind of farrilege to disse it.

Fingal was fad for Carthon; he commanded his bards to mark the day, when fhadowy autumn returned: And often did they mark the day and fing the hero's praife. "Who comes fo dark from ocean's roar, like autumn's shadowy cloud? Death is trembling in his hand! his eyes are flames of fire! Who roars along dark Lora's heath? Who but Carthon, king of fwords! The people fall! fee! how he strides, like the fullen ghost of Morven! But there he lies a goodly oak, which fudden blafts overturned! When shalt thou rife, Balclutha's joy? When Carthon, fhalt thou arife? Who comes to dark from ocean's roar, like autumn's fhadowy cloud?" Such were the words of the bards, in the day of their mourning: Offian often joined their voice; and added to their fong. My foul has been mournful for Carthon; he fell in the days of his youth : and thou, O Clefsammor! where is thy dwelling in the wind? Has the youth forgot his wound? Flies he, on clouds, with thee? I feel the fun, O Malvina! leave me to my reft. Perhaps they may come to my dreams; I think I hear a feeble voice! The beam of heaven delights to shine on the grave of Carthon: I feel it warm around!

O thou that rolleft above, round as the shield of my fathers! Whence are thy beams, O fun! thy everlasting light? Thou comest forth, in thy awful beauty; the stars hide themselves in the sky; the moon, cold and pale, finks in the western wave. But thou thyfelf movest alone: who can be a companion of thy course! The oaks of the mountains fall: the mountains themselves decay with years; the ocean fhrinks and grows again: the moon herfelf is loft in heaven; but thou art for ever the same; rejoicing in the bright-ness of thy course. When the world is dark with tempests; when thunder rolls, and lightning flies; thou lookest in thy beauty, from the clouds, and laughest at the storm. But to Ossian. thou lookest in vain; for he beholds thy beams no more; whether thy yellow hair flows on the eaftern clouds, or thou trembleft at the gates of the west. But thou art perhaps, like me, for a feafon, thy years will have an end. Thou fhalt fleep in thy clouds, careless of the voice of the morning. Exult then, O fun! in the ftrength of thy youth I Age is dark and unlovely; it is like the glimmering light of the moon, when it shines through broken clouds, and the mist is on the hills; the blaft of north is on the plain, the traveller shrinks in the midst of his journey.

OINA-MORUL:

Δ

P O E M.

ARGUMENT.

After an address to Malvina, the daughter of Toscar, Ossian proceeds to relate his own expedition to Fuärfed, an island of Scandinavia. Mal-orchol, king of Fuärfed, being hard pressed in war, by Ton-thormod, chief of Sar-dronlo, (who had demanded, in vain, the daughter of Mal-orchol in marriage) Fingal sent Ossian to his aid. Ossian, on the day after his arrival, came to battle with Ton-thormod, and took him prisoner. Mal-orchol offers his daughter Ossian morul to Ossian; but he, discovering her passion Ton-thormod, generously surrenders her to her lover, and brings about a reconciliation between the two kings.

OINA-MORUL:

P O E M.

A

As flies the unconstant fun, over Larmon's graffy hill; fo pass the tales of old, along my foul, by night! When bards are removed to their place; when harps are hung in Selma's hall; then comes a voice to Offian, and awakes his foul! It is the voice of years that are gone! they roll before me, with all their deeds ! I feize the tales, as they pass, and pour them forth in fong. Nor a troubled ftream is the fong of the king, it is like the rifing of music from Lutha of the strings. Lutha of many strings, not filent are thy ftreamy rocks, when the white hands of Malvina move upon the harp! Light of the fliadowy thoughts, that fly across my foul, daughter of Toscar of helmets, wilt thou not hear the fong! We call back, maid of Lutha, the years that have rolled away!

It was in the days of the king, while yet my locks were young, that I marked Con-cathlin *, on high, from ocean's nightly wave. My courfe was towards the ifle of Fuiirfed, woody dweller of feas! Fingal had fent me to the aid of Malorchol, king of Fuiirfed wild: for war was around him, and our fathers had met, at the feaft.

^{*} Con-cathlin, mild beam of the wave. What flar was fo called of old is not eafily afcertained. Some now diffinguith the pole-flar by that name. A fong, which is fill in repute, among the fea-faring part of the Highlanders, alludes to this poffage of Oflian. The author commends the knowledge of Oflian in fea affairs, a merit, which, perhaps, few of as moderns will allow him, or any in the age in which he lived.

In Col-coiled, I bound my fails; I fent my fword to Mal-orchol of fhells. He knew the fignal of Albion, and his joy arofe. He came from his own high hall, and feized my hand in grief. "Why comes the race of heroes to a falling king? Ton-thormod of many fpears is the chief of wavy Sar-dronlo. He faw and loved my daughter, white-bofomed Oinamorul. He fought; I denied the maid; for our fathers had been foes. He came, with battle, to Fuar-fied; my people are rolled away. Why comes the race of heroes to a falling king?"

I come not, I faid, to look, like a boy, on the strife. Fingal remembers Mal-orchol, and his hall for strangers. From his waves, the warrior descended, on thy woody isle. Thou wert no cloud before him. Thy feast was spread with songs. For this my sword shall rife; and thy foes perhaps may fail. Our friends are not forgot in their danger, tho' distant is our land.

"Defcendant of the daring Trenmor, thy words are like the voice of Cruth-loda, when he fpeaks, from his parting cloud, ftrong dweller of the fky! Many have rejoiced at my feaft; but they all have forgot Mal-orchol. I have looked towards all the winds; but no white fails were feen. But fteel * refounds in my hall; and not the joyful shells. Come to my dwelling, race of heroes! dark-skirted night is near. Hear the voice of fongs, from the maid of Fuärfed wild.

One thing is certain, that the Caledonians often made their way through the dangerous and tempefluous feas of Scandinavia; which is more, perhaps, than the more polified nations, fubfilting in those times, dared to venture. In estimating the degree of knowledge of arts among the ancients, we ought not to bring it into comparison with the improvements of modern times. Our advantages over them proceed more from accident, than any merit of ours.

We went. On the harp arose the white hands of Oina-morul. She waked her own sad tale, from every trembling string. I stood in silence; for bright in her locks was the daughter of many ides! Her eyes were two stars, looking forward thro' a rushing shower. The mariner marks them on high, and blesses the lovely beams. With morning we rushed to battle, to Tormul's resounding stream: the foe moved to the found of Ton-thormod's bossy shifted. From wing to wing the strife was mixed. I met Tonthormod in sight. Wide slew his broken steel. I seized the king in war. I gave his hand, bound saft with thongs, to Mal-orchol, the giver of thells. Joy rose at the feast of Fuärfed, for the foe had failed. Ton-thormod turned his face away, from Oina-morul of ifles!

^{*} There is a fevere fatire couched in this expression, against the guests of Mal-orchol. Had his feast been fill friead, had toy continued in his hall, his former parafites would not have failed to refort to him. But as the time of festivity was past, their attendance also ceased. The fentiments of a certain old bard are agreeable to this observation. He, poetically, compares a great man to a fire kindled in a defart place. " Those that pay court to him, fays he, are rolling large around him, like the fmoke about the fire. This fmoke gives the fire a great appearance at a distance, but it is but an empty vapour itself, and varying its form at every breeze. When the trunk which fed the fire, is confumed, the finoke departs on all the winds. So the flatterers forfake their chief, when his power declines." I have chosen to give a paraphrase, rather than a translation, of this passage, as the original is verlose and frothy, notwithstanding the sentimental merit of the author. He was one of the less ancient bards, and their compositions are not nervous enough to bear a literal manflation.

Son of Fingal, begun Mal-orchol, not forgot shalt thou pass from me. A light shall dwell in thy fhip, Oina-morul of flow-rolling eves. She thall kindle gladness, along thy mighty foul. Nor unheeded shall the maid move in Selma, thro' the dwelling of kings!

In the hall I lay in night. Mine eyes were half-closed in fleep. Soft music came to mine ear: it was like the rifing breeze, that whirls, at first, the thistle's beard; then flies, dark-shadowy, over the grafs. It was the maid of Fuarfed wild! she raised the nightly song; she knew that my foul was a stream, that flowed at pleafant founds. "Who looks," fhe faid, " from his rock, on ocean's closing mist? His long locks, like the raven's wing, are wandering on the blaft. Stately are his steps in grief! The tears are in his eyes! His manly breast is heaving over his burfting foul! Retire, I am diftant far; a wanderer in lands unknown. Tho' the race of kings are around me, yet my foul is dark. Why have our fathers been foes, Ton-thormod love of maids!"

"Soft voice of the streamy isle," I faid, "why dost thou mourn by night? The race of daring Trenmor are not the dark in foul. Thou shale not wander, by ftreams unknown, blue-eyed Oina-morul! Within this bosom is a voice; it comes not to other ears: it bids Offian hear the hapless, in their hour of woe. Retire, foft finger by night! Ton-thormod shall not mourn on his rock !"

With morning I loofed the king., I gave the long-haired maid. Mal-orchol heard my words, in the midft of his echoing halls. "King of Fuärfed wild, why should Ton-thormod mourn? He is of the race of heroes, and a slame in war. Your fathers have been foes, but now their dim ghosts rejoice in death. They fretch their hands of mist to the same shell in Loda. Forget their rage, ye warriors! it was the cloud of other years."

οť

Such were the deeds of Offian, while yet his locks were young: tho' lovelines, with a robe of beams, clothed the daughter of many isles. We call back, maid of Lutha, the years that have rolled away !

C O L N A - D O N A:

A

P O E M.

ARGUMENT.

Fingal dispatches Offian and Tofcar, the fon of Conloch and father of Malvina, to raise a stone, on the banks of the stream of Crona, to perpetuate the memory of a victory, which he had obtained in that place. When they were employed in that work, Car-ul, a neighbouring chief, invited them to a feast. They went: and Toscar fell desperately in love with Colna-dona, the daughter of Car-ul, Colna-dona became no less enamoured of of Car-ul, incident, at a hunting party, brings their of the a kap-py iffue.

COLNA-DONA:

P O E M.

*COL-AMON of troubled ftreams, dark wanderer of diffant vales, I behold thy course, between trees, near Car-ul's echoing halls! There dwelt bright Colna-dona, the daughter of the king. Her eyes were rolling stars; her arms were white as the foam of streams. Her breast rose flowly to sight, like ocean's heaving wave. Her soul was a stream of light. Who, among the maids, was like the love of heroes?

Beneath the voice of the king, we moved to Crona † of the ftreams, Tofcar of graffy Lutha, and Offian, young in fields. Three bards attended.

* Colna-dona fignifies the love of beroes. Col-amon, narrow river. Car-ul, dark-eyed. Col-amon, the refidence of Car-ul, was in the neighbourhood of Agricola's wall, towards the fouth. Car-ul feems to have been of the race of those Britons, who are distinguished by the name of Maiatæ, by the writers of Rome. Maiatæ is derived from two Galic words, Moi, a plain, and Arricu, inbabitants; so that the signification of Maiatæ is, the inbabitants of the plain country; a name given to the Britons, who were fettled in the Lowlands, in contraditingtion to the Caledonians (i. c. Cael-don, the Gauls of the blills), who were possessed in c. crossessed without of the collection of the control of the North-Britain.

† Crona, murmuring, was the name of a finall fiream, which difcharged itfelf in the river Carron. It is often mentioned by Oflian, and the feenes of many of his poems are on its banks. The enemies, whom Fingal defeated here, are not mentioned. They were, probably, the provincial Britons. That tract of country between the Friths of Forth and Clyde has been, through all antiquity, famous for battles and rencounters between the different nations, who were possessed for the North North.

ed with fongs. Three boffy fhields were borne before us: for we were to rear the ftone, in memory of the paft. By Crona's moffy courfe, Fingal had feattered his foes: he had rolled away the ftrangers, like a troubled fea. We came to the place of renown: from the mountains defcended night. I tore an oak from its hill, and raifed a flame on high. I bade my fathers to look down, from the clouds of their hall; for, at the fame of their race, they brighten in the wind.

I took a frone from the ftream, amidft the fong of bards. The blood of Fingal's foes hung curdled in its ooze. Beneath, I placed, at intervals, three boffes from the faileds of foes, as rofe or feil the found of Ullin's nightly fong. Tofcar laid a dagger in earth, a mail of founding fteel. We raifed the mould around the ftone, and bade it speak to other years.

Oozy daughter of streams, that now art reared on high, speak to the feeble, O stone! after Selma's rece have failed! Prone, from the stormy night, the traveller shall lay him, by thy side: thy whistling mos shall found in his dreams; the years that were past shall return. Battles rife before him, blue-shielded kings descend to war: the darkened moon looks from heaven, on the troubled field. He shall burst, with morning, from dreams, and see the tombs of warriors round. He shall ask about the stone, and the aged shall reply, "This grey stone was raised by Ossian, a chief of other years!"

* from Col-amon came a bard, from Car-ul, the friend of strangers. He bade us to the feast of North and South Britain. Stirling, a town fituated there, derives its name from that very circumftance. It is a corruption of the Galic name, STRILA, i. c. the bill, or rock, of contention.

* The manners of the Britons and Caledonians were so similar, in the days of Ossian, that there can be no doubt, that of Figs, to the dwelling of bright Colna-dona. We went to the hall of harps. There Car-ul brightened between his aged locks, when he beheld the fons of his friends, like two young branches before him.

"Sons of the mighty," he faid, "ye bring back the days of old, when first I descended from waves, on Selma's streamy vale! I pursued Duthmocarglos, dweller of ocean's wind. Our fathers had been foes, we met by Clutha's winding waters. He sled, along the sea, and my fails were spread behind him. Night deceived me, on the deep. I came to the dwelling of kings, to Selma of highbosomed maids. Fingal came forth with his bards and Conloch, arm of death. I feasted three days in the hall, and saw the blue eyes of Erin, Roscrana, daughter of heroes, light of Cormac's race. Nor forgot did my steps depart: the kings gave their shields to Car-ul: they hang, on high, in Col-amon, in memory of the past. Sons of the daring kings, ye bring back the days of old!"

Car-ul kindled the oak of feafts. He took two bosses from our shields. He laid them in earth, beneath a stone, to speak to the here's race. "When battle," said the king, "shall roar, and our sons are to meet in wrath. My race shall look, perhaps, on this stone, when they prepare the spear. Have not our fathers met in peace, they will fay, and lay afide the fhield?"

Night came down. In her long locks moved the daughter of Car-ul. Mixed with the harp arose the voice of white-armed Colna-dona. Toithey were originally the fame people, and defeended from those Gauls who first possessed themselves of South-Britain, and gradually migrated to the North. This hypothesis is more rational than the idle sables of ill-informed senachies, who bring car darkened in his place, before the love of heroes. She came on his troubled foul, like a beam to the dark-heaving ocean: when it burfts from a cloud, and brightens the foamy fide of a wave*.

car

* * * * * * * * * With morning we awaked the woods; an hung forward on the path of the roes. They fell by their wonted ftreams. We returned thro' Crona's vale. From the wood a youth came forward, with a shield and pointless spear. "Whence," said Toscar of Lutha, "is the flying beam? Dwells there peace at Col-amon, round bright Colnadona of harps?"

"By Col-amon of ftreams," faid the youth, bright Colna-dona dwelt. She dwelt; but her course is now in desarts, with the son of the king; he that seized with love her soul as it wandered thro' the hall." "Stranger of tales," faid Toscar, "haft thou marked the warrior's course? He must fall, give thou that bosy shield!" In wrath he took the shield. Fair behind it rose the breasts of a-maid, white as the bosom of a swan, rising graceful on swift-rolling waves. It was Colnadona of harps, the daughter of the king! Herblue eyes had rolled on Toscar, and her love arose!

the Caledonians from diftant countries. The bare opinion of Tacitus (which, by-the-bye, was only founded on a fimilarity of the perfonal figure of the Caledonians to the Germans of his own time), though it has flaggered fome learned men, is not Mifficient to make us believe, that the ancient inhabitants of North-Britain were a German colony. A difeuffion of apoint like this might be curious, but could never be fatisfactory. Periods fo diffant are fo involved in obfcurity, that nothing certain can be now advanced concerning them. The light which the Roman writers hold forth is too feeble to guide us to the truth, through the darknefs which has furrounded it.

" Here an epiiode is intirely loft; or, at leaft, is handed down to imperfectly, that it does not deferve a place in the poem...

O I T H O N A:

4

P O E M.

ARGUMENT.

Caul, the fon of Morni, attended Lathmon into his own contetry, after his being defeated in Morven, as related in the preceding poem. He was kindly entertained by Nuäth, the father of Lathmon, and fell in love with his daughter Oithona. The lady was no lefs enamoured of Gaul, and a day was fixed for their marriage. In the mean time Fingal, preparing for an expedition into the country of the Britons, fent for Gaul. He obeyed, and went: but not without promifing to Oithona to return, if he furvived the war, by a certain day. Lathmon too was obliged to attend his father Nuäth in his wars, and Oithona was left alone at Dunlathmon, the feat of the family. Dunrommath, lord of Uthal, supposed to be one of the Orkneys, taking advantage of the absence of her friends, came and carried off, by force, Oithona, who had formerly rejected his love, into Tromáthon, a defart ifland, where he concealed her in a cave.

Gaul returned on the day appointed; heard of the rape, and failed to Tromathon, to revenge himself on Dunrommath. When he landed, he found Oithona disconfolate, and refolved not to furvive the lofs of her honour. told him the flory of her misfortunes, and fhe fcarce ended, when Dunrommath, with his followers, appeared at the further end of the island. Gaul prepared to attack him, recommending to Oithona to retire, till the battle was over-She feemingly obeyed; but she fecretly armed herfelf, rushed into the thickest of the battle, and was mortally wounded. Gaul purfuing the flying enemy, found her just expiring on the field: he mourned over her, raifed her tomb, and returned to Morven. Thus is the flory handed down by tradition; nor is it given with any material difference in the poem, which opens with Gaul's return to Dunlath. mon, after the rape of Oithona.

OITHONA:

P O E M.

DARKNESS dwells around Dunlathmon, though the moon flews half her face on the hill. The daughter of night turns her eyes away; she beholds the approaching grief. The son of Morni is on the plain: there is no found in the hall. No long-streaming beam of light comes trembling through the gloom. The voice of Oithona * is not heard amidst the noise of the streams of Duv-"Whither art thou gone in thy beauty, dark-haired daughter of Nuäth? Lathmon is in the field of the valiant, but thou didft promife to remain in the hall; thou didft promife to remain in the hall till the fon of Morni returned. Till he returned from Strumon, to the maid of his love! The tear was on thy cheek at his departure; the figh rose in secret in thy breaft. But thou dost not come forth with fongs, with the lightly-trembling found of the harp!"

Such were the words of Gaul, when he came to Dunlathmon's towers. The 'gates were open and dark. The winds were bluftering in the hall. The trees frowed the threshold with leaves; the murmur of night was abroad. Sad and filent, filent, at a rock, the fon of Morni fat: his foul trembling for the maid; but he knew not whither to turn his course! The son * of Leth stood at a distance, and heard the winds in his bushy hair. But he did not raise his voice, for he saw the sorrow of Gaul!

Sleep descended on the chiefs. The visions of night arose. Oithona stood, in a dream, before the eyes of Morni's son. Her hair was loose and disordered: her lovely eye rolled deep in tears. Blood stained her snowy arm. The robe half hid the wound of her breast. She stood over the chief, and her voice was feebly heard. "Sleeps the son of Morni, he that was lovely in the eyes of Oithona? Sleeps Gaul at the distant rock, and the daughter of Nuüth low? The sea rolls round the dark sile of Tromathon. I sit in my tears in the cave! Nor do I sit alone, O Gaul! the dark chief of Cuthal is there. He is there in the rage of his love. What can Oithona do?"

A rougher blaft rushed through the oak. The dream of night departed. Gaul took his aspen spear. He stood in the rage of his soul. Often did his eyes turn to the east. He accused the lagging light. At length the morning came forth. The hero listed up the sail. The winds came rushing from the hill; he bounded on the waves of the deep. On the third day arose Tromáthon †, like a blue shield in the midst of the sea. The white wave roared against its rocks; sad Oithóna sat on the coast! She looked on the rolling waters, and her tears came down. But when she faw Gaul in his arms, she started, and turned her eyes away. Her lovely cheek is bent and red; her white arm trembles by her side. Thrice she strove to fly from his presence; thrice her steps sailed her as she went?

^{*} Morlo, the fon of Leth, is one of Fingal's most famous heroes. He and three other men attended Gaul on his expedition to Tromathon.

[†] Tróm-thón, heavy or deep-founding wave.

"Daughter of Nuäth," faid the hero, "why dost thou sly from Gaul? Do my eyes send forth the slame of death? Darkens hatred in my soul? Thou art to me the beam of the east, rising in a land unknown. But thou coverest thy face with sadness, daughter of car-borne Nuäth! Is the foe of Oithona near? My soul burns to meet him in fight. The sword trembles by the side of Gaul, and longs to glitter in his hand. Speak, daughter of Nuäth! dost thou not behold my tears?"

"Young chief of Strumon," replied the maid, "why comest thou over the dark-blue wave, to Nuäth's mournful daughter? Why did I not pass away in secret, like the flower of the rock, that lifts its fair head unseen, and strows its withered leaves on the blast? Why didst thou come, O Gaul! to hear my departing sigh? I vanish in my youth; my name shall not be heard. Or it will be heard with grief; the tears of Nuäth must fall. Thou wilt be sad, son of Morni! for the departed same of Oithona. But she shall sleep in the narrow tomb, far from the voice of the mourner. Why didst thou come, chief of Strumon! to the sea-beat rocks of Tromáthon?"

" I came to meet thy foes, daughter of carborne Nuith! the death of Cuthal's chief darkens before me; or Morni's fon fhall fall! Oithona! when Gaul is low, raife my tomb on that oozy rock. When the dark-bounding ship shall pass, call the sons of the sea! call them,

them, and give this fword, to bear it hence to Morni's hall. The grey-haired chief will then ceafe to look towards the defart, for the return of his fon!"

" Shall the daughter of Nuath live?" fhe replied with a burfting figh. "Shall I live in Tromáthon, and the fon of Morni low? My heart is not of that rock; nor my foul careless as that fea; which lifts its blue waves to every wind, and rolls beneath the florm! The blaft which shall lay thee low, shall spread the branches of Oithona on earth. We shall wither together, fon of carborne Morni! The narrow house is pleasant to me, and the grey stone of the dead: for never more will I leave thy rocks, O fea-furrounded Tromathon! Night * came, on with her clouds, after the departure of Lathmon, when he went to the wars of his fathers, to the moss-covered rock of Duthormoth. Night came on. I fat in the hall, at the beam of the oak! The wind was abroad in the trees. I heard the found of arms. Joy rose in my face. I thought of thy return. It was the chief of Cuthal, the red-haired strength of Dunrommath. His eyes rolled in fire: the blood of my people was on his fword. They who defended Oithona fell by the gloomy chief! What could I do? My arm was weak. I could not lift the spear. He took me in my grief, amidst my tears he raifed the fail. He feared the returning Lathmon, the brother of unhappy Oithona! But behold he comes with his people! the dark wave is divided before him! Whither wilt thou turn thy fteps, fon of Morni? Many are the warriors of thy foe !"

« My

^{*} Oithona relates how she was carried away by Dun-rommath,

"My fteps never turned from battle," Gaul faid, and unsheathed his sword. "Shall I then begin to fear, Oithona! when thy foes are near? Go to thy cave, my love, till our battle cease on the field. Son of Leth, bring the bows of our fathers! the founding quiver of Morni! Let our three warriors bend the yew. Ourfelves will lift the spear. They are an host on the rock! our fouls are strong in war!"

Oithóna went to the cave. A troubled joy rose on her mind, like the red path of lightning on a stormy cloud! Her soul was resolved; the tear was dried from her wildly-looking eye. Dunronmath slowly approached. He saw the son of Morni. Contempt contracted his sace, a smile is on his dark-brown cheek; his red eye rolled, half-concealed, beneath his shaggy brows!

"Whence are the fons of the fea?" begun the gloomy chief. " Have the winds driven you on the rocks of Tromathon? Or come you in fearch of the white-handed maid? The fons of the unhappy, ye feeble men, come to the hand of Dunrommath! His eye spares not the weak; he delights in the blood of strangers. Oithona is a beam of light, and the chief of Cuthal enjoys it in fecret; wouldft thou come on its loveliness, like a cloud, fon of the feeble hand! Thou mayft come, but shalt thou return to the halls of thy fathers?" " Dost thou not know me," faid Gaul, " red-haired chief of Cuthal? Thy feet were fwift on the heath, in the battle of car-borne Lathmon; when the fword of Morni's fon purfued his hoft, in Morven's woody land. Dunrommath! thy words are mighty, for thy warriors gather behind thee.

But do I fear them, fon of pride? I am not of the race of the feeble!"

Gaul advanced in his arms; Dunrommath Arunk behind his people. But the fpear of Gaul pierced the gloomy chief; his fword lopped off his head, as it bended in death. The fon of Morni fhook it thrice by the lock; the warriors of Dunrommath fled. The arrows of Morven purfued them: ten fell on the mosfly rocks. The rest lift the founding fail, and bound on the troubled deep. Gaul advanced towards the cave of Oithona. He beheld a youth leaning on a rock. An arrow had pierced his side; his eye rolled faintly beneath his helmet. The foul of Morni's son was sad, he came and spoke the words of peace.

"Can the hand of Gaul heal thee, youth of the mournful brow? I have fearched for the herbs of the mountains; I have gathered them on the fecret banks of their fireams. My hand has closed the wound of the brave, their eyes have bleffled the fon of Morni. Where dwelt thy fathers, warrior? Were they of the fons of the mighty? Saches shall come, like night, on thy native fireams. Thou art fallen in thy youth !"

"My fathers," replied the stranger, "were of the race of the mighty; but they shall not be sad; for my same is departed like morning mist. High walls rise on the banks of Duvranna; and see their mossy to the stream; a rock ascends behind them with its bending pines. Thou mayst behold it far distant. There my brother dwells. He is renowned in battle; give him this glittering helm.

The helmet fell from the hand of Gaul. It was the wounded Oithona! She had armed herself in the cave, and came in fearch of death. Her heavy eyes are half clofed; the blood pours from her heaving fide. "Son of Morni!" fhe faid, "prepare the narrow tomb. Sleep grows, like darknefs, on my foul. The eyes of Oithóna are dim! O had I dwelt at Duvranna, in the bright beam of my fame! then had my years come on with joy; the virgins would then blefs my fteps. But I fall in youth, fon of Morni! my father shall blush in his hall!"

She fell pale on the rock of Tromáthon. The mournful warrior raifed her tomb. He came to Morven; we faw the darkness of his soul. Offlan took the harp in the praise of Oithóna. The brightness of the face of Gaul returned. But his figh rose, at times, in the midst of his friends; like blasts that shake their unfrequent wings, after the stormy winds are laid!

C R O M A:

A

P O E M.

ARGUMENT.

Malvina the daughter of Tofcar is overheard by Offian lamenting the death of Ofcar her lover. Offian, to divert her grief, relates his own actions in an expedition which he undertook, at Fingal's command, to aid Crothar the petty king of Croma, a country in Ireland, against Rothmar who invaded his dominions. The story is delivered down thus in tradition. Crothar king of Croma being blind with age, and his son too young for the field, Rothmar the chief of Tromlo resolved to avail himself of the opportunity offered of annexing the dominions of Crothar to his own. He accordingly marched into the country subject to Crothar, but which he held of Arth or Artho, who was, at the time, supreme king of Ireland.

Crothar being, on account of his age and blindness, unsit for action, sent for aid to Fingal king of Scotland; who ordered his fon Offian to the relief of Crothar. But before his arrival Fovar-gormo, the son of Crothar, attacking Rothmar, was slain himself, and his forces totally defeated. Offian renewed the war; came to battle, killed Rothmar, and routed his army. Croma being thus delivered of its enemies, Offian returned to Scotland.

C R O M A:

P O E M.

I T was the voice of my love! feldom art thou, in the dreams of Malvina! Open your airy halls, O fathers of Toscar of shields! Unfold the gates of your clouds: the steps of Malvina are near. I have heard a voice in my dream. I feel the fluttering of my foul. Why didst thou come, O blast! from the dark-rolling face of the lake? Thy rustling wing was in the tree; the dream of Malvina sled. But she beheld her love, when his robe of mist slew on the wind. A sun-beam was on his skirts, they glittered like the gold of the stranger. It was the voice of my love! seldom comes he to my dreams!"

"But thou dwelleft in the foul of Malvina, fon of mighty Offian! My fighs arife with the beam of the eaft; my tears defeend with the drops of night. I was a lovely tree, in thy prefence, Ofcar, with all my branches round me; but thy death came like a blaft from the defart, and laid my green head low. The fpring returned with its fhowers; no leaf of mine arofe! The virgins faw me filent in the hall; they touched the harp of joy. The tear was on the cheek of Malvina: the virgins beheld me in my grief. Why art thou fad? they faid; thou first of the maids of Lutha! Was he lovely as the beam of the morning, and stately in thy fight?"

F 4 Pleafan

Pleafant is thy fong in Offian's ear, daughter of streamy Lutha! Thou hast heard the music of departed bards, in the dream of thy rest, when fleep fell on thine eyes, at the murmur of Moruth *. When thou didft return from the chace, in the day of the fun, thou hast heard the music of bards, and thy fong is lovely! It is lovely, O Malvina! but it melts the foul. There is a joy in grief when peace dwells in the breast of the fad. Eut forrow wastes the mournful, O daughter of Tofcar! and their days are few! They fall away, like the flower on which the fun hath looked in his firength after the mildew has paffed over it, when its head is heavy with the drops of night. Attend to the tale of Offian, O maid! He remembers the days of his youth!

The king commanded; I raifed my fails, and rushed into the bay of Croma; into Croma's founding bay in lovely Inisfail *. High on the coast arose the towers of Crothar king of spears; Crothar renowned in the battles of his youth; but age dwelt then around the chief. Rothmar had vaifed the fword against the hero; and the wrath of Fingal burned. He fent Offian to meet Rothmar in war, for the chief of Croma was the friend of his youth. I fent the bard before me with fongs. I came into the hall of Crothar. fat the chief amidst the arms of his fathers, but his eyes had failed. His grey locks waved around a staff, on which the warrior leaned. He hummed the fong of other times, when the found of our arms reached his ears. Crothar rofe, stretched his aged hand, and bleffed the fon of Fingal.

" Offian!" faid the hero, " the strength of Crothar's arm has failed. O could I lift the fword, fword, as on the day that Fingal fought at Strutha! He was the first of men! but Crothar had also his fame. The king of Morven praised me; he placed on my arm the bossy shield of Calthar, whom the king had slain in his wars. Dost thou not behold it on the wall, for Crothar's eyes have failed? Is thy strength, like thy fathers, Ossian is let the aged feel thine arm!"

^{*} Mor'-ruth, great fiream. † Inisfail, one of the ancient names of Ireland.

I gave my arm to the king; he felt it with his aged hands. The figh rofe in his breaft, and his tears came down. "Thou art ftrong, my fon, he faid, but not like the king of Morven! But who is like the hero among the mighty in war! Let the feaft of my hall be fpread; and let my bards exalt the fong. Great is he that is within my walls, ye fons of echoing Croma!" The feaft is fpread. 'The harp is heard; and joy is in the hall. But it was joy covering a figh, that darkly dwelt in every breaft. It was like the faint beam of the moon fpread on a cloud in heaven. At length the music ceased, and the aged king of Croma spoke; he spoke without a tear, but forrow swelled in the midst of his voice.

" Son of Fingal! behold'ft thou not the darkness of Crothar's joy ? My foul was not fad at the feast, when my people lived before me. rejoiced in the prefence of ftrangers, when my fon shone in the hall. But, Oslian, he is a beam that is departed. He left no streak of light behind. He is fallen, fon of Fingal! in the wars of his father. Rothmar the chief of graffy Tromlo heard that thefe eyes had failed; he heard that my arms were fixed in the hall, and the pride of his foul arose! He came towards Croma; my people fell before him. I took my arms in my wrath, but what could fightless Crothar do? My steps were unequal; my grief was great. I wished for the days that were past. Days! wherein I fought:

I fought; and won in the field of blood. My fon returned from the chace; the fair-haired Fovar-gormo *. He had not lifted his fword in battle, for his arm was young. But the foul of the youth was great; the fire of valour burnt in his eyes. He faw the difordered steps of his father, and his figh arofe." "King of Croma," he faid, " is it because thou hast no son; is it for the weakness of Fovar-gormo's arm that thy fighs arise? I begin, my father, to feel my strength; I have drawn the fword of my youth; and I have bent the bow. Let me meet this Rothmar, with the fons of Croma: let me meet him, O my father! I feel my burning foul!" " And thou shalt meet him, I faid, fon of the fightless Crothar! But let others advance before thee, that I may hear the tread of thy feet at thy return; for my eyes behold thee not, fair-haired Fovar-gormo! He went, he met the foe; he fell. Rothmar advances to Croma. He who flew my fon is near with all his pointed fpears."

This is no time to fill the shell, I replied, and took my spear! My people saw the fire of my eyes; they all arose around. Through night we strode along the heath. Grey morning rose in the east. A green narrow vale appeared before us; nor wanting was its winding stream. The dark host of Rothmar are on its banks, with all their glittering arms. We fought along the vale. They sled. Rothmar funk beneath my sword! Day had not descended in the west, when I brought his arms to Crothar. The aged hero felt them with his hands; and joy brightened over all his thoughts.

The people gathered to the hall. The fhells of the feaft are heard. Ten harps are firung: five bards advance, and fing, by turns *, the praife of Offian; they poured forth their burning fouls, and the firing answered to their voice. The joy of Croma was great: for peace returned to the land. The night came on with filence; the morning returned with joy. No foe came in darkness, with his glittering spear. The joy of Croma was great; for the gloomy Rothmar had fallen!

[.] Faobhar-gorm, the blue foint of fleel.

I raifed

* Those extempore compositions were in great repute among fuceeding bards. The pieces extant of that kind shew more of the good ear, than of the poetical genius of their authors. The translator has only net with one poem of this fort, which he thinks worthy of being preferved. It is a thousand years later than Ossian, but the authors seem to have observed his manner, and adopted some of his expressions. The story of it is this: Five bards, passing the night in the house of a chief, who was a poet himself, went severally to make their observations on, and return with an extempore description of, night. The night happened to be one in October, as appears from the peem, and in the north of Scotland, it has all that variety which the bards ascribe to it, in their descriptions.

FIRST BARD.

N IGHT is dull and dark. The clouds rest on the hills. No star with green trembling beam; no moon looks from the sky. I hear the blast in the wood; but I hear it distant far. The stream of the valley murmurs; but its murmur is sullen and sad. From the tree at the grave of the dead the longhowing owl is heard. I see a dim form on the plain! It is a ghost! it sades, it slies. Some suneral shall pass this way: the meteor marks the path.

The distant dog is howling from the hut of the hill. The stag lies on the mountain moss: the hind is at his side. She hears the wind in his branchy horns. She starts, but lies again.

The roe is in the cleft of the rock; the heath-cock's head is beneath his wing. No beaft, no bird is abroad, but the owl and the howling fox. She on a leaflefs tree; he in a cloud on the hill.

Dark, panting, trembling, fad, the traveller has loft his way. Through fhrubs, through thorns, he goes, along the gurgling I raifed my voice for Fovar-gormo, when they laid the chief in earth. The aged Crothar was there, but his figh was not heard. He fearched gurgling rill. He fears the rock and the fen. He fears the ghost of night. The old tree groans to the blast; the falling branch resourds. The wind drives the withered burs, clung together, along the grafs. It is the light tread of a ghost! It trembles amidst the night.

Dark, dusky, howling is night, cloudy, windy, and full of ghoss! The dead are abroad! my friends, receive me from the night.

SECOND BARD.

The wind is up. The shower descends. The spirit of the mountain shrieks. Woods fall from high. Windows stap. The growing river roars. The traveller attempts the fort Hark! that shriek! he dies! The storm drives the horse from the hill, the goet, the lowing cow. They tremble as drives the shower, beside the mouldering bank.

The hunter ftarts from fleep, in his lonely hut; he wakes the fire decayed. His wet dogs fmoke around him. He fills the chinks with heath. Loud roar two mountain ftreams which meet beside his booth.

Sad on the fide of a hill the wandering shepherd fits. The tree resounds above him. The stream roars down the rock. He waits for the rising moon to guide him to his home.

Ghosts ride on the form to-night. Sweet is their voice between the fqualls of wind. Their fongs are of other worlds.

The rain is path. The dry wind blows. Streams roar, and windows flap. Cold drops fall from the roof. I fee the flarry ky. But the shower gathers again. The west is gloomy and dark. Night is stormy and dismal; receive me, my friends, from night.

THIRD BARD.

The wind fill founds between the hills: and whiftes through the grafs of the rock. The firs fall from their place. The turfy hut is torn. The clouds, divided, fly over the fky, and fliew the burning flars. The meteor, token of death! flies fparkling through the gloom. It refs on the hill. I fee the withered fern, the dark-browed rock, the fallen oak. Who is that in his flirowd beneath the tree, by the fream?

The waves dark tumble on the lake, and lash its rocky fides. The boat is brimful in the cove; the oars on the rocking ide. A maid fits sad beside the rock, and eyes the rolling stream. Her lever promised to come. She saw his boat, for the wound of his fon, and found it in his breaft. Joy rose in the face of the aged. He came and spoke to Ossian. "King of spears!" he said, "my son has not fallen without his fame. The young.

when

when yet it was light, on the lake. Is this his broken boat.

on the fhore? Are these his groans on the wind?

Hark! the hail rattles around. The flaky fnow defcends. The tops of the hills are white. The flormy winds abate. Various is the night and cold; receive me, my friends, from night.

FOURTH BARD.

Night is calm and fair; blue, ftarry, fettled is night. The winds, with the clouds, are gone. They fink behind the hill. The moon is up on the mountain. Trees glifter: ftreams fine on the rock. Bright rolls the fettled lake; bright the ftream of the vale.

I fee the trees overturned; the shocks of corn on the plain. The wakeful hind rebuilds the shocks, and whistles on the dif-

tant field

Calm, fettled, fair is night! Who comes from the place of the dead? That form with the robe of fnow; white arms, and dark-brown hair! It is the daugnter of the chief of the people: the that lately fell! Come let us view thee, O maid! thou that haft been the delight of heroes! The blaft drives the phantom away; white, without form, it afcends the hill.

The breezes drive the blue mift, flowly, over the narrow vale. It rifes on the hill, and joins its head to heaven. Night is fettled, calm, blue, flarry, bright with the moon.

Receive me not, my friends, for lovely is the night.

FIFTH BARD.

Night is calm, but dreary. The moon is in a cloud in the weft. Slow moves that pale beam along the shaded hill. The distant wave is heard. The torrent murmurs on the rock. The cock is heard from the booth. More than half the night is past. The house-wife, groping in the gloom, rekindles the settled fire. The hunter thinks that day approaches, and calls his bounding degs. He ascends the hill, and whistles on his way. A blast removes the cloud. He sees the starty plough of the north. Much of the night is to pass. He nods by the mostly rock.

Hark! the whirlwind is in the wood! A low murmur in the vale! It is the mighty army of the dead returning from the air.

young warrior did not fly; but met death, as he went forward in his ftrength. Happy are they who die in youth, when their renown is heard! The feeble will not behold them in the hall; or finile at their trembling hands. Their memory shall be honoured in fong; the young tear of the virgin will fall. But the aged wither away, by degrees, the fame of their youth, while yet they live, is all forgot. They fall in fecret. The figh of their fon is not heard. Joy is around their tomb; the stone of their fame is placed without a tear. Happy are they who die in youth, when their renown is around them!"

The moon refts behind the hill. The beam is fill on that lofty rock. Long are the fladows of the trees. Now it is dark over all. Night is dreary, filent, and dark; receive me, my friends, from night.

THE CHIEF.

Let clouds reft on the hills: fpirits fly, and travellers fear. Let the winds of the woods arife, the founding florms defeend. Roar ftreams and windows flap, and green winged meteors fly! rife the pale moon from behind her hills, or inclofe her head in clouds! night is alike to me, blue, flormy, or gloomy the fky. Night flies before the beam, when it is poured on the hill. The young day returns from his clouds, but we return no more.

Where are our chiefs of old? Where our kings of mighty name? The fields of their battles are filent. Scarce their moffy tombs remain. We shall also be forgot. This lofty house shall fall. Our sons shall not behold the ruins in grass. They shall ask of the aged, "Where stood thewalls of our fathers?"

Raife the fong, and frike the harp; fend round the shells of joy. Suspend a hundred tapers on high. Youths and maids begin the dance. Let some grey bard be near me to tell the deeds of other times; of kings renowned in our land, of chiefs we behold no more. Thus let the night pass until morning shall appear in our halls. Then let the bow be at hand, the dogs, the youths of the chace. We shall ascend the bill with day; and awake the deer.

CALTHON AND COLMAL:

Δ

P O E M.

ARGUMENT.

This piece, as many more of Offian's compositions, is addreffed to one of the first Christian missionaries. The story of the poem is handed down, by tradition, thus: In the country of the Britons between the walls, two chiefs lived in the days of Fingal, Dunthalmo, lord of Teutha, fupposed to be the Tweed; and Rathmor, who dwelt at Clutha, well known to be the river Clyde. Rathmor was not more renowned for his generofity and hospitality. than Duothalmo, was infamous for his cruelty and ambition. Dunthalmo, through envy, or on account of fome private feuds, which fubfifted between the families, murdered Rathmor at a feast; but being afterwards touched with remorfe, he educated the two fons of Rathmor, Calthon and Colmar, in his own house. They growing up to man's estate, dropped some hints that they intended to revenge the, death of their father, upon which Dunthalmo flut them up in two caves on the banks of Teutha. intending to take them off privately. Colmal, the daughter of Dunthalmo, who was fecretly in love with Calthon. helped him to make his escape from prison, and fled with him to Fingal, difguifed in the habit of a young warrior, and implored his aid against Dunthalmo. Fingal fent Offian with three hundred men to Colmar's relief. Dunthalmo having previously murdered Colmar, came to a. battle with Offian; but he was killed by that hero, and his army totally defeated.

Calthen married Colmal, his deliverer; and Offian returnedto Morven.

CALTHON AND COLMAL:

A

9 E M.

PLEASANT is the voice of thy fong, thou lonely dweller of the rock! It comes on the found of the stream, along the narrow vale. My foul awakes, O stranger! in the midst of my hall. I ftretch my hand to the spear, as in the days of other years. I stretch my hand, but it is feeble; and the figh of my bosom grows. Wilt thou not liften, fon of the rock! to the fong of Offian? My foul is full of other times; the joy of my youth returns. Thus the fun appears in the west, after the steps of his brightness have moved behind a ftorm; the green hills lift their dewy heads: the blue streams rejoice in the vale. The aged hero comes forth on his staff; his grey hair glitters in the beam. Dost thou not behold, son of the rock! a shield in Offian's hall? It is marked with the strokes of battle; and the brightness of its bosses has failed. That shield the great Dunthalmo bore, the chief of streamy Teutha. Dunthalmo bore it in battle, before he fell by Offian's spear. Listen, son of the rock! to the tale of other years!

Rathmor was a chief of Clutha. The feeble dwelt in his hall. The gates of Rathmor were never flut; his feast was always spread. The fons of the stranger came. They blessed the generous chief of Clutha. Bards raifed the fong, and touched the harp: joy brightened on the face of the fad! Dunthalmo came, in his pride, and rushed into the combat of Rathmor. The chief of Clutha overcame: the rage of Dunthalmo rose. He came, by night, with his warriors; the mighty Rathmor fell. He fell in his halls, where his feast was often spread for strangers.

generous

Colmar and Calthon were young, the fons of car-borne Rathmor. They came, in the joy of youth, into their father's hall. They behold him in his blood; their burfting tears defcend. The foul of Dunthalmo melted, when he faw the children of youth. He brought them to Alteutha's * walls; they grew in the house of their foe. They bent the bow in his presence; and came forth to his wars. They faw the fallen walls of their fathers; they faw the green thorn in the hall. Their tears rushed forth in fecret. At times, their faces were fad. Dunthalmo beheld their grief: his darkening foul defigned their death. He closed them in two caves, on the echoing banks of Teutha. The fun did not come there with his beams; nor the moon of heaven by night. The fons of Rathmor remained in darkness, and foresaw their death.

The daughter of Dunthalmo wept in filence, the fair-haired, blue-eyed Colmal +. Her eye had ^{*} Al-teutha, or rather Balteutha, the town of Tweed, the name of Dunthalmo's feat. It is observable that all the names in this poem, are derived from the Galic language; which is a proof that it was once the univerfal language of the whole island.

[†] Caol-mhal, a woman with finall eye-brows; fmall eyebrows were a diftinguishing part of beauty in Offian's time : and he feldom fails to give them to the fine women of his poems.

had rolled in fecret on Calthon; his loveliness swelled in her soul. She trembled for her warrior; but what could Colmal do? Her arm could not lift the spear; nor was the sword formed for her side. Her white breast never rose beneath a mail. Neither was her eye the terror of heroes. What canst thou do, O Colmal! for the falling chief? Her steps are unequal; her hair is loose: her eye looks wildly through her tears. She came, by night, to the hall *. She armed her lovely form in steel; the steel of a young warrior, who fell in the first of his battles. She came to the cave of Calthon, and loosed the thong from his hands.

"Arise, son of Rathmor," she said, "arise, the night is dark! Let us fly to the king of Selma +, chief of fallen Clutha! I am the fon of Lamgal, who dwelt in thy father's hall. I heard of thy dark dwelling in the cave, and my foul arose. Arife, fon of Rathmor, arife, the night is dark!" "Bleft voice!" replied the chief, "comest thou from the clouds to Calthon? The ghofts of his fathers have often descended in his dreams, fince the fun has retired from his eyes, and darkness has dwelt around him. Or art thou the son of Lamgal, the chief I often faw in Clutha? But shall I fly to Fingal, and Colmar my brother low? Will I fly to Morven, and the hero closed in night? No: give me that spear, son of Lamgal, Calthon will defend his brother !"

" A thou-

^{*} That is, the hall where the arms taken from enemies were hung up as trophies. Offian is very careful to make his ftories probable; for he makes Colmal put on the arms of a youth killed in his first battle, as more proper for a young woman, who cannot be supposed strong enough to carry the armour of a full-grown warrior.

† Fingal.

" A thousand warriors," replied the maid, " ftretch their fpears round car-borne Colmar. What can Calthon do against a host so great? Let us sly to the king of Morven, he will come with war. His arm is stretched forth to the unhappy; the lightning of his fword is round the weak. Arife, thou fon of Rathmor! the finadows will fly away. Arife, or thy fteps may be feen, and thou must fall in youth!"

The fighing hero rofe; his tears defcend for car-borne Colmar. He came with the maid to Selma's hall; but he knew not that it was Colmal. The helmet cover'd her lovely face. Her bosom heaved beneath the steel. Fingal returned from the chase, and found the lovely strangers. They were like two beams of light, in the midst of the hall of shells. The king heard the tale of grief; and turned his eyes around. A thousand heroes half-rose before him; claiming the war of Teutha. I came with my spear from the hill; the joy of battle rose in my breast; for the king spoke to Ossan in the midst of a thousand chiefs.

"Son of my strength," began the king, " take thou the spear of Fingal. Go to Teutha's rushing stream, and fave the car-borne Colmar. Let thy fame return before thee like a pleafant gale; that my foul may rejoice over my fon, who renews the renown of our fathers. Offian! be thou a ftorm in war; but mild when the foe is low! It was thus my fame arose, O my fon! be thou like Selma's chief. When the haughty come to my halls, my eyes behold them not. But my arm is stretched forth to the unhappy. My fword defends the weak."

I rejoiced in the words of the king. I took my rattling arms. Diaran * rofe at my fide, and Dargo + king of spears. Three hundred youths followed our steps: the lovely strangers were at my side. Dunthalmo heard the sound of our approach. He gathered the strength of Teutha. He stood on a hill with his host. They were like rocks broken with thunder, when their bent trees are singed and bare, and the streams of their chinks killed by Crimora, his mistress.

* Diaran, father of that Connal who was unfortunately

† Dargo, the son of Collath, is celebrated in other poems by Oslian. He is said to have been killed by a boar at a hunting party. The lamentation of his mistress, or wife, Mingala, over his body, is extant; but whether it is of Oslian's composition, I cannot determine. It is generally ascribed to him, and has much of his manner; but some traditions mention it as an imitation by some later bard. As it has some poetical merit, I have subjoined it.

THE spoule of Dargo comes in tears: for Dargo was no more! The heroes sigh over Lartho's chief: and what snall fad Mingala do? The dark soul vanished like morning mist, before the king of spears: but the generous glowed in kis presence like the morning star.

Who was the fairest and most lovely? Who but Collath's stately son? Who sat in the midst of the wife, but Dargo of the mighty deeds?

Thy hand touched the trembling harp: Thy voice was foft as summer-winds. Ah me! what shall the heroes say? for Dargo fell before a boar. Pale is the lovely cheek; the look of which was firm in danger! Why hast thou sailed on our hills? thou fairer than the beams of the sun!

The daughter of Adonfion was lovely in the eyes of the valiant; the was lovely in their eyes, but the chose to be the fpouse of Dargo.

But thou art alone, Mingala! the night is coming with its clouds; where is the bed of thy repose? Where but in the tomb of Dargo?

Why dost thou lift the stone, O bard? why dost thou shut the narrow house? Mingala's eyes are heavy, bard! She must sleep with Dargo.

Last night I heard the fong of joy in Lartho's losty hall. But filence dwells around my bed. Mingala rests with Dargo.

chinks have failed. The stream of Teutha rolled, in its pride, before the gloomy foe. I fent a bard to Dunthalmo, to offer the combat on the plain; but he fmiled in the darkness of his pride. His unfettled hoft moved on the hill; like the mountain cloud, when the blaft has entered its womb, and featters the curling gloom on every fide.

They brought Colmar to Teutha's bank, bound with a thousand thongs. The chief is sad, but stately. His eye is on his friends; for we stood in our arms, whilft Teutha's waters rolled between. Dunthalmo came with his fpear, and pierced the hero's fide : he rolled on the bank in his blood. We heard his broken fighs. Calthon rushed into the stream: I bounded forward on my spear. Teutha's race fell before us. Night came rolling down. Dunthalmo rested on a rock amidst an aged wood. The rage of his boson burned against the car-borne Calthon. But Calthon stood in his grief; he mourned the fallen Colmar; Colmar flain in youth, before his fame arofe!

I bade the fong of woe to rife, to footh the mournful chief; but he stood beneath a tree, and often threw his spear on earth. The humid eye of Colmal rolled near in a fecret tear: she forefaw the fall of Dunthalmo, or of Clutha's warlike chief. Now half the night had paffed away. Silence and darkness were on the field. Sleep rested on the eyes of the heroes: Calthon's fettling foul was still. His eyes were half-closed; but the murmur of Teutha had not yet failed in his ear. Pale, and shewing his wounds, the ghost of Colmar came: he bent his head over the hero, and raifed his feeble voice!

" Sleeps the fon of Rathmor in his night, and his brother low? Did we not rife to the chace together?

gether? Pursued we not the dark brown hinds? Colmar was not forgot till he fell: till death had blasted his youth. I lie pale beneath the rock of Lona. O let Calthon rise! the morning comes with its beams; Dunthalmo will dishonour the fallen." He passed away in his blast. The rising Calthon saw the steps of his departure. He rushed in the found of his steel. Unhappy Colmal rose. She followed her hero through night, and dragged her spear behind. But when Calthon came to Lona's rock, he found his fallen brother. The rage of his bosom rose; he rushed among the foe. The groans of death ascend. They close around the chief. He is bound in the midst, and brought to gloomy Dunthalmo. The shout of joy arose; and the hills of night replied.

I started at the sound: and took my father's spear. Diaran rose at my side; and the youthful strength of Dargo. We missed the chief of Clutha, and our souls were sad. I dreaded the departure of my fame. The pride of my valour rose! "Sons of Morven!" I said, "it is not thus our fathers sought. They rested not on the field of strangers, when the soe was not fallen before them. Their strength was like the eagles of heaven; their renown is in the song. But our people sall by degrees. Our same begins to depart. What shall the king of Morven say, if Ossian conquers not at Teutha? Rise in your steel, ye warriors! follow the sound of Ossian's course. He will not return, but renowned, to the echoing walls of Selma."

Morning rose on the blue waters of Teutha. Colmal stood before me in tears. She told of the chief of Clutha: thrice the spear fell from her hand. My wrath turned against the stranger; for my soul trembled for Calthon. "Son of the feeble hand!" I faid, "do Teutha's warriors fight with tears? The battle is not won with grief; nor dwells the figh in the foul of war. Go to the deer of Carmun, to the lowing herds of Teutha. But leave these arms, thou son of fear! A warrior may lift them in fight."

feeble

I tore the mail from her shoulders. Her snowy breast appeared. She bent her blushing face to the ground. I looked in silence to the chiefs. The spear fell from my hand; the sigh of my bofom rose! But when I heard the name of the maid, my crowding tears rushed down. I blessed the lovely beam of youth, and bade the battle move!

Why, fon of the rock, should Offian tell how Teutha's warriors died? They are now forgot in their land; their tombs are not found on the heath. Years came on with their storms. The green mounds are mouldered away. Scarce is the grave of Dunthalmo seen, or the place where he fell by the spear of Offian. Some grey warrior, half blind with age, sitting by night at the slaming oak of the hall, tells now my deeds to his sons, and the fall of the dark Dunthalmo. The saces of youth bend sidelong towards his voice. Surprize and joy burn in their eyes! I found Calthon bound to an oak; my sword cut the thongs from his hands. I gave him the white-bosomed Colmal. They dwelt in the halls of Teutha.

T H E

WAR OF CAROS:

A

P O E M.

ARGUMENT.

Caros is probably the noted ufurper Caraufius, by birth a Menapian, who affumed the purple in the year 284: ane, feizing on Britain, defeated the Emperor Maximian Herculius in feveral naval engagements, which gives propriety to his being called in this poem the king of flips. He repaired Agricola's wall, in order to obstruct the incursions of the Caledonians; and when he was employed in that work, it appears he was attacked by a party under the command of Ofear the son of Ofsian. This battle is the soundation of the present poem, which is addressed to Malvina the daughter of Tofcar.

WAR OF CAROS:

Á

P O E M.

BRING, daughter of Toscar! bring the harp! the light of the songrises in Osian's soul! It is like the field, when darkness covers the hills around, and the shadow grows slowly on the plain of the sun. I behold my son, O Malvina! near the mostly rock of Crona*. But it is the mist of the defart, tinged with the beam of the west! Lovely is the mist, that assumes the form of Oscar! turn from it, ye winds, when ye roar on the side of Ardven!

Who comes towards my fon, with the murmur of a fong? His ftati is in his hand, his grey hair loose on the wind. Surly joy lightens his face. He often looks back to Caros. It is Ryno † of fongs, he that went to view the foe. "What does Caros king of thips?" faid the fon of the now mournful G 2 Offian.

^{*} Crona is the name of a fmall ftream which runs into the Carron.

[†] Ryno is often mentioned in the ancient poetry. He feems to have been a Bard, of the first rank, in the days of Fingal.

Offian, "fpreads he the wings * of his pride, bard of the times of old!" "He fpreads them, Ofcar," replied the bard, "but it is behind his gathered heap +. He looks over his ftones with fear. He beholds thee terrible, as the ghoft of night, that rolls the wave to his fhips!"

"Go, thou first of my bards!" fays Oscar, take the spear of Fingal. Fix a slame on its point. Shake it to the winds of heaven. Bid him, in songs, to advance, and leave the rolling of his wave. Tell to Caros that I long for battle; that my bow is weary of the chace of Cona. Tell him the mighty are not here; and that my arm is young."

He went with the murmur of fongs. Ofcar reared his voice on high. It reached his heroes on Ardven, like the noife of a cave; when the fea of Togorma rolls before it; and its trees meet the roaring winds. They gather round my fon like the ftreams of the hill; when, after rain, they roll in the pride of their course. Ryno came to the mighty Caros. He struck his flaming spear. Come to the battle of Ofcar, O thou that sittest on the rolling of waves! Fingal is distant far; he hears the songs of bards in Morven: the wind of his hall is in his hair. His terrible spear is at his side; his shield that is like the darkened moon! Come to the battle of Ofcar; the hero is alone!

He came not over the fireamy Carun ‡. The bard returned with his fong. Grey night grows dim on Crona. The feath of shells is spread. A hundred oaks burn to the wind; faint light gleams over the heath. The ghosts of Ardven pass pass through the beam, and shew their dim and distant forms. Comala * is half unseen on her meteor; Hidallan is sullen and dim, like the darkened moon behind the mist of night.

^{*} The Roman eagle.

⁺ Agricola's wall, which Caraufius repaired.

The river Carron.

darkened moon behind the mift of night.

"Why art thou fad?" faid Ryno; for he alone beheld the chief. "Why art thou fad, Hidallan! haft thou not received thy fame? The fongs of Offian have been heard; thy ghoft has brightened in wind, when thou didft bend from thy cloud, to hear the fong of Morven's bard!" "And do thine eyes," faid Ofcar, "behold the chief, like the dim meteor of night? Say, Ryno, fay, how fell Hidallan, the renowned in the days of my fathers? His name remains on the rocks of Cona. I have often feen the freams of his hills!"

Fingal, replied the bard, drove Hidallan from his wars. The king's foul was fad for Comala, and his eyes could not behold the chief. Lonely, fad along the heath, he flowly moved, with filent fteps. His arms hang difordered on his fide. His hair flies loofe from his brow. The tear is in his down-caft eyes; a figh half-filent in his breaft! Three days he ftrayed unfeen, alone, before he came to Lamor's halls: the mostly halls of his fathers, at the fream of Balva †. There Lamor fat alone beneath a tree; for he had fent his people with Hidallan to war. The fream ran at his feet,

This is the feene of Comala's death, which is the fubject of the dramatic poem. The poet mentions her in this place, in order to introduce the fequel of Hidallan's flory, who on account of her death, had been expelled from the wars of Fingal.

+ This is perhaps that finall stream, still retaining the name of Balva, which runs through the romantic valley of Glentivar in Stirlingshire. Balva figuifies a filent fiream; and Glentivar, the language dute.

his grey head refted on his staff. Sightless are his aged eyes. He hums the fong of other times. The noise of Hidallan's feet came to his ear: he knew the tread of his fon-

" Is the fon of Lamor returned; or is it the found of his ghost? Hast thou fallen on the banks of Carun, fon of the aged Lamor? Or, if I hear the found of Hidallan's feet; where are the mighty in the war? where are my people, Hidallan! that were wont to return with their echoing shields? Have they fallen on the banks of Carun?"

" No:" replied the fighing youth, " the people of Lamor live. They are renowned in war, my father! but Hidalian is renowned no more. I must sit alone on the banks of Balva, when the roar of the battle grows."

"But thy fathers never fat alone," replied the rifing pride of Lamor. " They never fat alone on the banks of Balva, when the roar of battle rofe. Dost thou not behold that tomb? My eyes difcern it not; there refts the noble Garmallon, who never fled from war! Come, thou renowned in battle, he fays, come to thy father's tomb. How am I renowned, Garmállon? my fon has fled from war!"

"King of the streamy Balva!" faid Hidallan with a figh, " why doft thou torment my foul? Lamor, I never fled. Fingal was fad for Comala; he denied his wars to Hidallan. Go to the grey ftreams of thy land, he faid; moulder like a leafless oak, which the winds have bent over Balva, never more to grow!"

" And must I hear," Lamor replied, " the lonely tread of Hidallan's feet? When thousands are renowned in battle, shall he bend over my grey streams? Spirit of the noble Garmallon! carry carry Lamor to his place; his eyes are dark; his foul is fad; his fon has loft his fame!"

"Where," faid the youth, "fhall I fearch for fame to gladden the foul of Lamor? From whence shall I return with renown, that the found of my arms may be pleasant in his ear? If I go to the chace of hinds, my name will not be heard. Lamor will not feel my dogs, with his hands, glad at my arrival from the hill. He will not enquire of his mountains, or of the dark-brown deer of his defarts !"

"I must fall," said Lamor, "like a leastless oak: it grew on a rock! it was overturned by the winds! My ghost will be feen on my hills, mournful for my young Hidallan. Will not ye, ye mists! as ye rife, hide him from my fight? My fon! go to Lamor's hall: there the arms of our fathers hang. Bring the fword of Garmállon; he took it from a foe!"

He went and brought the fword with all its Andded thongs. He gave it to his father. The grey-haired hero felt the point with his hand.

" My fon! lead me to Garmallon's tomb: it rifes befide that ruftling tree. The long grafs is withered; I hear the breezes whittling there. A little fountain murmurs near, and fends its water to Balva. There let me rest; it is noon: the fun is on our fields!"

He led him to Garmállon's tomb. Lamor pierced the fide of his fon. They fleep together: their ancient halls moulder away. Ghosts are feen there at noon: the valley is filent, and the people fhun the place of Lamor.

"Mournful is thy tale," faid Ofcar, "fon of the times of old! My foul fighs for Hidallan; he fell in the days of his youth. He flies on the blast of the defart, his wandering is in a foreign land. Sons of the echoing Morven! draw near to the foes of Fingal. Send the night away in fongs; watch the strength of Caros. Ofcar goes to the people of other times; to the shades of silent Ardven; where his fathers sit dim in their clouds, and behold the future war. And art thou there, Hidallan, like a half-extinguifhed meteor? Come to my fight, in thy forrow, chief of the winding Balva !"

The heroes move with their fongs. Ofcar flowly afcends the hill. The meteors of night fet on the heath before him. A diffant torrent faintly roars. Unfrequent blafts rufh through aged oaks. The half-enlightened moon finks dim and red behind her hill. Feeble voices are heard on the heath. Ofcar drew his fword!

"Come," faid the hero, "O ye ghofts of my fathers! ye that fought against the kings of the world! Tell me the deeds of future times; and your converse in your caves; when you talk together, and behold your fons in the fields of the brave."

Trenmor came from his hill, at the voice of his mighty fon. A cloud, like the freed of the ftranger, fupported his airy limbs. His robe is of the mist of Lano, that brings death to the people. His fword is a green meteor : half-extinguished. His face is without form, and dark. He fighed thrice over the hero: thrice the winds of night roared around! Many were his words to Ofcar; but they only came by halves to our ears: they were dark as the tales of other times, before the light of the fong arofe. He flowly vanished, like a mist that melts on the funny hill. It was then, O daughter of Tofcar! my fon began first to be fad. He forefaw the fall of his race. At times, he

he was thoughtful and dark; like the fun when he carries a cloud on his face, but again he looks forth from his darknefs on the green hills of Cona.

Ofcar paffed the night among his fathers, grey morning met him on Carun's banks. A green vale furrounded a tomb which arofe in the times of old. Little hills lift their head at a diftance; and fretch their old trees to the wind. The warriors of Caros fat there, for they had paffed the fiream by night. They appeared, like the trunks of aged pines, to the pale light of the morning. Ofcar frood at the tomb, and raifed thrice his terrible voice. The rocking hills echoed around; the flarting roes bounded away: And the trembling ghofts of the dead fled, fliricking on their clouds. So terrible was the voice of my fon, when he called his friends!

A thousand spears arose around; the people of Caros rofe. Why daughter of Tofcar, why that tear? My fon, though alone, is brave. Ofcar is like a beam of the fky; he turns around and the people fall. His hand is the arm of a ghost, when he stretches it from a cloud; the rest of his thin form is unfeen; but the people die in the vale! My fon beheld the approach of the foe; he flood in the filent darkness of his ftrength. "Am I alone, faid Ofcar, in the midft of a thousand foes? Many a spear is there! many a darkly-rolling eye! fhall I fly to Ardven? But did my fathers ever fly? The mark of their arm is in a thousand battles. Ofcar too shall be renowned! Come, ve dim ghofts of my fathers, and behold my deeds in war! I may fall; but I will be renowned like the race of the echoing Morven." He ftood, growing in his place, like a flood in a narrow vale! The battle came, but they fell: bloody was the fword of Ofcar!

G 5

The noise reached his people at Crona; they came like a hundred streams. The warriors of Caros fled; Ofcar remained like a rock left by the ebbing fea. Now dark and deep, with all his fteeds, Caros rolled his might along: the little streams are lost in his course; the earth is rocking round. Battle fpreads from wing to wing: ten thousand swords gleam at once in the fky. But why should Offian sing of battles? For never more shall my steel shine in war. I remember the days of my youth with grief; when I feel the weakness of my arm. Happy are they who fell in their youth, in the midst of their renown! They have not beheld the tombs of their friends: or failed to bend the bow of their strength. Happy art thou, O Ofcar, in the midst of thy rushing blaft. Thou often goeft to the fields of thy fame, where Caros fled from thy lifted fword.

Darkness comes on my foul, O fair daughter of Tofcar! I behold not the form of my fon at Carun; nor the figure of Ofcar on Crona. The ruftling winds have carried him far away; and the heart of his father is fad, But lead me, O Malvina! to the found of my woods; to the roar of my mountain streams. Let the chace be heard on Cona; let me think on the days of other years. And bring me the harp, O maid! that I may touch it, when the light of my foul shall arise. Be thou near, to learn the fong; future times shall hear of me! The fons of the feeble hereafter will lift the voice on Cona; and, looking up to the rocks, fay, " Here Offian dwelt." They shall admire the chiefs of old, the race that are no more! while we ride on our clouds, Malvina! on the wings of the roaring winds. Our voices shall be heard, at times, in the defart; we shall fing on the breeze of the rock.

CATHLIN OF CLUTHA:

A

P O E M.

ARGUMENT.

An address to Malvina, the daughter of Toscar. The poet relates the arrival of Cathlin in Selma, to folicit aid against Duth-carmor of Cluba, who had killed Cathmol, for the fake of his daughter Lanul. Fingal declining to make 2 choice among his heroes, who were all claiming the command of the expedition; they retired each to his hill of ghofts; to be determined by dreams. The fpirit of Trenmor appears to Offian and Ofcar: they fail, from the bay of Carmona, and, on the fourth day, appear off the valley of Rathcol, in Inis-huna, where Duth-carmor had fixed his refidence. Offian dispatches a bard to Duth-carmor to demand battle. Night comes on. The diffrefs of Cathlin of Clutha. Offian devolves the command on Ofcar, who, according to the cuftom of the kings of Morven, before battle, retired to a neighbouring hill. Upon the ceming on of day, the battle joins. Ofcar and Duth-carmor meet. The latter falls. Ofcar carries the mail and helmet of Duthcarmor to Cathlin, who had retired from the field. Cathlin is discovered to be the daughter of Cathmol, in disguise, who had been carried off, by force, by, and had made her escape from, Duth-carmor.

CATHLIN OF CLUTHA:

A

P O E M.

*COME, thou beam that art lonely, from watching in the night! The fqually winds are around thee, from all their echoing hills. Red, over my hundred streams, are the light-covered paths of the dead. They rejoice, on the eddying winds, in the season of night. Dwells there no joy in song, white hand of the harps of Lutha? Awake the voice of the string; roll my soul to me. It is a stream that has failed. Malvina, pour the song.

I hear thee, from thy darkness, in Schma, thou that watchest, lonely, by night! Why didst thou

* The traditions which accompany this poem, inform us, that it went, of old, under the name of Laoi-Oi-latha: i. e. the bywn of the maid of Lunba. They pretend allo to fix the time of its composition, to the third year after the death of Fingal; that is, during the expedition of Fergus the fon of Fingal, to the banks of Uifca-dutben. In support of this opinion, the Highland senachies have prefixed to this poem, an address of Oslian, to Congal the young son of Fergus, which I have rejected, as having no manner of connection with the reft of the piece. It has poetical merit: and, probably, it was the opening of one of Oslian's other poems, though the bards injudiciously transferred it to the piece now before us.

"Congal, fon of Fergus of Durath, thou light between thy locks, afcend to the rock of Selma, to the oak of the breaker of fhields. Look over the bosem of night, it is streaked with the red paths of the dead: look on the night of ghosts, and kindle, O Congal! thy soul. Be not, like the moon on a stream, lonely in the midst of clouds: darkness closes around it; and the beam departs. Depart not, son of Fergus! ere thou markest the field with thy sword. Afrend to the rock of Selma; to the oak of the breaker of shields."

thou withhold the fong, from Offian's failing foul? As the falling brook to the ear of the hunter, defcending from his ftorm-covered hill; in a fun-beam rolls the echoing ftream; he hears, and fhakes his dewy locks: fuch is the voice of Lutha, to the friend of the fpirits of heroes. My welling bofom beats high. I look back on the days that are paft. Come, thou beam that art lonely, from watching in the night!

In the echoing bay of Carmona * we faw, one day, the bounding fhip. On high, hung a broken fhield; it was marked with wandering blood. Forward came a youth, in arms, and firetched his pointlefs fpear. Long, over his tearful eyes, hung loofe his difordered locks. Fingal gave the fhell of kings. The words of the ftranger arofe. In his hall lies Cathmol of Clutha, by the winding

* Car-mona, bay of the derk brown bills, an arm of the fea, in the neighbourhood of Sclma. In this paragraph are mentioned the fignals prefented to Fingal, by thofe who came to demand his aid. The fuppliants held, in one hand, a fhield covered with blood, and, in the other, a broken fpear; the first a fymbol of the death of their friends, the last an emblem of their own helplefs situation. If the king chose to grant succours, which generally was the case, he reached to them the field of fealts, as a token of his hospitality and friendly intentions towards them.

It may not be difagreeable to the reader to lay here before him the ceremony of the Cran-tara, which was of a fimilar nature, and, till very lately, ufed in the Highlands. When the news of an enemy came to the refidence of the chief, he immediately killed a goat with his own fword, dipped the; and of an half-burnt piece of wood in the blood, and gave it to one of his fervants, to be carried to the next hamlet. Fromhamlet to hamlet this telera was carried with the utmolt expedition, and, in the space of a few hours, the whole clanwere in arms, and convened in an appointed place; the name of which was the only word that accompanied the delivery of the Cran-tara. This symbol was the manifesto of the chief, by which he threatened fire and fword to those of his clan, that did not immediately appear at his standard.

ing of his own dark ftreams. Duth-carmor faw white-bosomed Lanul *, and pierced her father's fide. In the rushy defart were my steps. He sled in the feason of night. Give thine aid to Cathlin to revenge his father. I fought thee not as a beam, in a land of clouds, Thou, like the fun, art known, king of echoing Selma!"

Selma's king looked around. In his presence, we rose in arms. But who should lift the shield? for all had claimed the war. The night came down; we strode, in silence; each to his hill of ghosts: that spirits might descend, in our dreams, to mark us for the field. We struck the shield of the dead: we raised the hum of songs. We thrice called the ghosts of our fathers. We laid us down in dreams. Trenmor came, before mine eyes, the tall form of other years! His blue hosts were behind him in half-distinguished rows. Scarce seen is their strife in mist, or their stretching forward to deaths. I listened; but no sound was there. The forms were empty wind!

I started from the dream of ghosts. On a sudden blast slew my whistling hair. Low-sounding, in the oak, is the departure of the dead. I took my shield from its bough. Onward came the ratting of steel. It was Oscar + of Lego.

^{*} Lanul, full eyed, a furname which, according to tradition, was beflowed on the daughter of Cathmol, on account of her beauty; this tradition, however, may have been founded on that partiality, which the bards have flewn to Cathlin of Clutha; for, according to them, no faljebood could dwell in the feal of the levely.

⁺ Often is here called Often of Lego, from his mother being the daughter of Branno, a powerful chief, on the banks of that lake. It is remarkable that Offian addreffes no poem to Malvina, in which her lover Often was not one of the principal actors. His attention to her, after the death of his fon, flews that delicacy of fentiment is not confined, as fome fondly imagine, to our own polified times.

He had feen his fathers. " As rufhes forth the blaft, on the bosom of whitening waves; so careless shall thy course be, through ocean, to the dwelling of foes. I have feen the dead, my father! My beating foul is high! My fame is bright before me, like the streak of light on a cloud, when the broad fun comes forth, red traveller of the fky !"

"Grandfon of Branno," I faid; "not Ofcar alone shall meet the foe. I rush forward, thro ocean, to the woody dwelling of heroes. Let us contend, my fon, like eagles, from one rock; when they lift their broad wings, against the ftream of winds." We raifed our fails in Carmona. From three ships, they marked my thield on the wave, as I looked on nightly Tonthena *, red traveller between the clouds. Four days came the breeze abroad. Lumon came forward in mift. In winds were its hundred groves. Sun-beams marked, at times, its brown fide. White, leapt the foamy streams, from all its echoing rocks.

A green field, in the bofom of hills, winds filent with its own blue stream. Here, midst the waving of oaks, were the dwellings of kings of old. But filence, for many dark-brown years, had fettled in graffy Rath-col +; for the race of heroes

^{*} Ton-thena, fire of the wave, was the remarkable flar mentioned in the feventh book of Temora, which directed the course of Larthon to Ireland. It seems to have been well known to those, who failed on that sea, which divides Ireland from South-Britain. As the course of Oslian was along the coast of Inis-huna, he mentions with propriety, that star which directed the voyage of the colony from that country to Ireland.

⁺ Rath-col, woody field, does not appear to have been the refidence of Duth-carmor; he feems rather to have been forced heroes had failed, along the pleafant vale. Duthcarmor was here, with his people, dark rider of the wave. Ton-thena had hid her head in the iky. He bound his white-bofomed fails. His course is on the hills of Rath-col, to the seats of roes. We came. I sent the bard, with songs, to call the foe to fight. Duth-carmor heard him, with joy. The king's soul was like a beam of fire; a beam of fire, marked with smoak, rushing, varied, thro' the bosom of night. The deeds of Duth-carmor were dark, tho' his arm was strong.

Night came, with the gathering of clouds. By the beam of the oak we fat down. At a diftance ftood Cathlin of Clutha. I faw the changeful * foul of the stranger. As shadows fly over the field of grafs, so various is Cathlin's cheek. It was fair within locks, that rose on Rath-col's wind. I did not rush, amidst his soul, with my words. I bade the fong to rife.

" Ofcar

forced thither by a florm; at leaft I fhould think that to be the meaning of the poet, from his expression, that Ton-thewa I all his ker keal, and that he bount his relite-besoned fails; which is as much as to say, that the weather was stormy, and that Duth-carmor put into the bay of Rath-col for shelter.

* From this circumstance, succeeding bards seigned that Cathlin, who is here in the disguise of a young warrior, had fallen in love with Duth-carmor at a seaft, to which he had been invited by her father. Her love was converted into detribution for him, after he had murdered her father. But us those rain-boxes of heaven are changeful, say my authors, speaking of women, she felt the return of her former passion, upon the approach of Duth-carmor's danger. I mysfelf, who think more favourably of the fex, must attribute the agitation of Cathlin's mind to her extreme sensibility to the injuries done her by Duth-carmor: and this opinion is favoured by the sequel of the story.

"Ofcar of Lego," I faid, "be thine the fecret hill †, to-night. Strike the shield, like Morven's kings. With day, thou shalt lead in war. From my rock, I shall see thee, Ofcar, a dreadful form ascending in fight, like the appearance of ghosts, amidst the storms they raise. Why should mine eyes return to the dim times of old, ere yet the song had bursted forth, like the sudden rising of winds? But the years, that are past, are marked with mighty deeds. As the nightly rider of waves looks up to Ton-thena of beams: so let us turn our eyes to Trenmor, the stather of Kings."

"Wide in Caracha's echoing field, Carmal had poured his tribes. They were a dark ridge of waves. The grey-haired bards were like moving foam on their face. They kindled the firife around, with their red-rolling eyes. Nor alone were the dwellers of rocks; a fon of Loda was there; a voice, in his own dark land, to call the ghofts from high. On his hill, he had dwelt, in Lochlin, in the midft of a leaflefs grove. Five tones lifted, near, their heads. Loud roared his rufhing ftream. He often raifed his voice to the winds, when meteors marked their nightly wings; when the dark-robed moon was rolled behind her hill. Nor unheard-of ghofts was he! They came:

[†] This paffage alludes to the well-known cuftom among the ancient kings of Scotland, to retire from their army on the night preceding a battle. The flory which Offian introduces in the next paragraph, concerns the fall of the Druids. It is faid in many old poems, that the Druids in the extremity of their affairs, had folicited and obtained aid from Scandinavia. Among the auxiliaries there came many pretended magicians, which circumfance Offian alludes to, in his defeription of the fon of Loda. Magic and incantation could not, however, prevail; for Tremort, affifted by the valour of his fon Trathal, entirely broke the power of the Druids.

with the found of eagle wings. They turned battle, in fields, before the kings of men.

" But, Trenmor, they turned not from battle. He drew forward that troubled war; in its dark fkirt was Trathal, like a rifing light. It was dark; and Loda's fon poured forth his figns, on night. The feeble were not before thee, ion of other lands *! Then rose the strife of kings, about the hill of night; but it was foft as two fummer gales, flaking their light wings, on a lake. Trenmor yielded to his fon; for the fame of the king had been heard. Trathal came forth before his father, and the foes failed, in echoing Caracha. The years that are past, my fon, are marked with mighty deeds +."

In clouds rose the eastern light. The foe came forth in arms. The strife is mixed on Rathcol, like the roar of streams. Behold the contending of kings! They meet beside the oak. In gleams of fteel the dark forms are loft: fuch is the meeting of meteors, in a vale by night: red light is fcattered round, and men forefee the ftorm! Duth-carmor is low in blood! The fon of Offian overcame! Not harmless in battle was he, Malvina hand of harps!

Nor, in the field, were the fteps of Cathlin. The stranger stood by a fecret stream, where the foam of Rath-col skirted the mosly stones. Above, bends the branchy birch, and ftrews its leaves, on wind. The inverted spear of Cathlin touched.

* Trenmor and Trathal. Offian introduced this epifode, as an example to his fon, from ancient times.

[†] Those who deliver down this poem in tradition, lament that there is a great part of it loft. In particular they regret the lofs of an epifode, which was here introduced, with the fequel of the story of Carmal and his Druids. Their attachment to it was founded on the descriptions of magical inchantments which it contained.

140 CATHLIN OF CLUTHA.

touched, at times, the ftream. Ofcar brought Duth-carmor's mail: his helmet with its eagle wing. He placed them before the stranger, and his words were heard. "The foes of thy father have failed. They are laid in the field of ghosts. Renown returns to Morven, like a rifing wind. Why art thou dark, chief of Clutha? Is there cause for grief?" " Son of Offian of harps, my foul is darkly fad. I behold the arms of Cathmol, which he raifed in war. Take the mail of Cathlin, place it high in Selma's hall; that thou mayeft remember the haples in thy distant land." From white breasts. descended the mail. It was the race of kings; the foft-handed daughter of Cathmol, at the ftreams of Clutha! Duth-carmor faw her bright in the hall, he had come, by night, to Clutha. Cathmol met him, in battle, but the hero fell. Three days dwelt the foe, with the maid. On the fourth the fled in arms. She remembered the race of kings, and felt her burfting foul!

Why, maid of Tofcar of Lutha, should I tell how Cathlin failed? Her tomb is at rufhy Lumon, in a diffant land. Near it were the fteps of Sul-malla, in the days of grief. She raifed the fong, for the daughter of ftrangers, and touched the mournful harp.

Come, from the watching of night, Malvina, lonely beam!

SUL-MALLA

O F

 $L \quad U \quad M \quad O \quad N:$

A

P O E M.

ARGUMENT.

This poem, which, properly speaking, is a continuation of the last, opens with an address to Sul-malla, the daughter of the king of Inis-huna, whom Offian met, at the chace, as he returned from the battle of Rath-col. Sul-malla invites Offian and Ofcar to a feast, at the residence of her father, who was then absent in the wars. Upon hearing their name and family, she relates an expedition of Fingal into Inis-huna. She casually mentioning Cathmor, chief of Atha (who then assisted her father against his enemies), Offian introduces the episode of Culgorm and Suran-dronlo, two Scandinavian kings, in whose wars Offian himself and Cathmor were engaged on opposite sides. The story is imperfect, a part of the original being lost. Offian, warned in a dream, by the ghost of Trenmor, sets sail from Inis-huna.

SUL-MALLA

0 F

L U M O N

A P O E M.

W HO moves fo ftately, on Lumon, at the roar of the foamy waters? Her hair falls upon her heaving breaft. White is her arm behind, as flow fhe bends the bow. Why doft thou wander in defarts, like a light thro' a cloudy field? The young roes are panting, by their fecret rocks. Return, thou daughter of kings! the cloudy night is near! It was the young branch of green Inis-huna, Sul-malla of blue eyes. She fent the

The expedition of Offian to Inis-huna happened a fhort-time before Fingal paffed over into Ireland, to dethrone Cairbar the fon of Borbar-duthul. Cathmor, the brother of Cairbar, was aiding Conmor, king of Inis-huna, in his wars, at the time that Offian defeated Duth-carmor, in the valley of Rathcol. The poem is more interesting, that it contains so many particulars concerning those personages, who make so great a figure in Temora.

The exact correspondence in the manners and customs of Inis-huna, as here described, to those of Caledonia, leaves no room to doubt, that the inhabitants of both were originally the same people. Some may allege, that Osian might transfer, in his poetical descriptions, the manners of his own nation to foreigners. This objection is easily answered. Why has he not done this with regard to the inhabitants of Scandinavia? We find the latter very different in their customs and superstitions from the nations of Britain and Ireland. The Scandinavian manners are remarkably barbarous and fierce, and seem to mark out a nation much less advanced in a state-of civilization, than the inhabitants of Britain were in the times of Ossian.

bard from her rock, to bid us to her feast. Amidst the song we sat down, in Cluba's echoing hall. White moved the hands of Sul-malla, on the trembling strings. Half-heard amidst the sound was the name of Atha's king: he that was absent in battle for her own green land. Nor absent from her soul was he; he came midst her thoughts by night. Ton-thena looked in, from the sky, and saw her tossing arms.

The found of shells had ceased. Amidst long locks, Sul-malla rose. She spoke with bended eyes, and asked of our course thro' seas; "for of the kings of men are ye, tall riders of the wave*." "Not unknown," I said, "at his streams is he, the father of our race. Fingal has been heard of at Cluba, blue-eyed daughter of kings. Nor only, at Cona's stream, is Oslian and Oscar known. Foes trembled at our voice, and shrunk in other lands."

" Not unmarked," faid the maid, " by Sulmalla, is the shield of Morven's king. It hangs high, in my father's hall, in memory of the patt;

when

^{*} Sul-malla here discovers the quality of Ossian and Oscar, from their stature and stately gait. Among nations, not far advanced in civilization, a fuperior beauty and flateliness of person were inseparable from nobility of blood. It was from thefe qualities, that those of family were known by ftrangers, not from tawdry trappings of state injudiciously thrown round them. The cause of this distinguishing property, must, in fome meafure, be afcribed to their unnixed blood. They had no inducement to intermarry with the vulgar: and no low notions of interest made them deviate from their choice, in their own fphere. In flates, where luxury has been long eitablished, beauty of person is, by no means, the characteristic of antiquity of family. This must be attributed to those enervating vices, which are infeparable from luxury and wealth. A great family (to alter a little the words of the historian), it is true, like a river, becomes confiderable from the length of its courfe, but, as it rolls on, hereditary diffempers, as well as property, flow fuccessively into it.

when Fingal came to Cluba, in the days of other years. Loud roared the boar of Culdarnu, in the midft of his rocks and woods. Inis-huna fent her youths, but they failed: and virgins wept over tombs. Careless went Fingal to Culdarnu. On his fpear rolled the strength of the woods. He was bright, they faid, in his locks, the first of mortal men. Nor at the feaft were heard his words. His deeds passed from his foul of fire, like the rolling of vapours from the face of the wandering fun. Not careless looked the blue eyes of Cluba on his stately steps. In white bosoms rose the king of Selma, in the midst of their thoughts by night. But the winds bore the ftranger to the echoing vales of his roes. Nor loft to other lands was he, like a meteor that finks in a cloud. He came forth, at times, in his brightness, to the distant dwelling of foes. His fame came, like the found of winds, to Cluba's woody vale *."

"Darkness dwells in Cluba of harps: the race of kings is distant far; in battle is my father Vol. I. H Commor:

^{*} Too partial to our own times, we are ready to mark out remote antiquity, as the region of ignorance and barbarifm. This, perhaps, is extending our prejudices too far. It has been long remarked, that knowledge, in a great measure, is founded on a free intercourse between mankind; and that the mind is enlarged in proportion to the observations it has made upon the manners of different men and nations. If we look, with attention, into the history of Fingal, as delivered by Ossian, we shall find that he was not altogether a poor ignorant hunter, confined to the narrow corner of an island. His expeditions to all parts of Scandinavia, to the north of Germany, and the different states of Great Britain and Ireland, were very numerous, and performed under such a character, and at such times, as gave him an opportunity to mark the undiffusifed manners of mankind. War and an active life, as they call forth, by turns, all the powers of the soul, present to us the different characters of men: in times of peace and quiet,

*Conmor: and Lormar * my brother, king of streams. Nor darkening alone are they; a beam From other lands, is nigh; the friend of strangers + in Atha, the troubler of the field. High, from their mifty hills, look forth the blue eyes of Erin; for he is far away, young dweller of their fouls! Nor, harmless, white hands of Erin! is Cathmor in the skirts of war; he rolls ten thousand before him, in his distant field."

" Not unfeen by Offian," I faid, "rufhed Cathmor from his streams, when he poured his strength on I-thorno t, isle of many waves! In strife met two kings in I-thorno, Culgorm and Suran-dronlo: each from his echoing ifle, ftern hunters of the boar !"

"They met a boar, at a foamy stream: each pierced him with his spear. They strove for the fame for want of objects to exert them, the powers of the mind lie concealed, in a great measure, and we see only artificial pasfions and manners. It is from this confideration I conclude, that a traveller of penetration could gather more genuine knowledge from a tour of ancient Gaul, than from the minuteft observation of all the artificial manners, and elegant refinencents of modern France.

* Lormar was the fon of Conmor, and the brother of Sulmalla. After the death of Conmor, Lormar fucceeded him in the throne.

+ Cathmor, the fon of Borbar-duthul. It would appear, from the partiality with which Sul-malla speaks of that hero. that she had seen him, previous to his joining her father's army; tho' tradition positively afferts, that it was, after his return, that she fell in love with him.

I-thorno, fays tradition, was an ifland of Scandinavia. In it, at a hunting party, met Culgorm and Suran-dronlo, the kings of two neighbouring ifles. They differed about the honour of killing a boar; and a war was kindled between them. From this ep fode we may learn, that the manners of the Scandinavians were much more favage and cruel, than those of Britain. It is remarkable, that the names, introduced in this flory, are not of Galic original, which circumstance affords room to suppose, that it had its foundation in true history.

fame of the deed; and gloomy battle rofe. From ifle to ifle they fent a fpear, broken and ftained with blood, to call the friends of their fathers, in their founding arms. Cathmor came, from Erin, to Culgorm, red-eyed king: I aided Suran-dronlo, in his land of boars."

"We rushed on either side of a stream, which roared thro' a blafted heath. High broken rocks were round, with all their bending trees. Near were two circles of Loda, with the stone of power; where fpirits descended, by night, in dark-red streams of fire. There, mixed with the murmur of waters, rose the voice of aged men, they called the forms of night, to aid them in their war."

" * Heedless I stood, with my people, where fell the foamy stream from rocks. The moon moved red from the mountain. My fong, at times arofe. Dark, on the other fide, young Cathmor heard my voice; for he lay, beneath the oak, in all his gleaming arms. Morning came; we rushed to fight: from wing to wing is the rolling of strife. They fell, like the thistle's head, beneath autumnal winds."

"In armour came a ftately form: I mixed my ftrokes with the chief. By turns our shields are pierced: loud rung our fteely mails. His helmet fell to the ground. In brightness shone the foe. His eyes, two pleafant flames, rolled between his wandering locks. I knew Cathmor H 2

[·] From the circumstance of Ossian not being present at the rites, described in the preceding paragraph, we may suppose that he held them in contempt. This difference of sentiment, with regard to religion, is a fort of argument, that the Caledonians were not originally a colony of Scandinavians, as fome have imagined. Concerning fo remote a period, mere conjecture must supply the place of argument and positive proofs, of Atha, and threw my fpear on earth. Dark, we turned, and filent passed to mix with other frees."

Not fo passed the striving kings*. They mixed in echoing fray: like the meeting of ghosts, in the dark wing of winds. Thro' either breast rushed the spears; nor yet lay the foes on earth! A rock received their fall; half-reclined they lay in death. Each held the lock of his foe; each grimly seemed to roll his eyes. The stream of the rock leapt on their shields, and mixed below with blood.

The battle ceased in I-thorno. The strangers met in peace: Cathmor from Atha of streams, and Ossian, king of harps. We placed the dead in earth. Our steps were by Runar's bay. With the bounding boat, afar, advanced a ridgy wave. Dark was the rider of seas, but a beam of light was there, like the ray of the sun, in Stromlo's rolling smoak. It was the daughter † of Suran-dronlo, wild in brightened looks.

 Culgorm and Suran-dronlo. The combat of the kings and their attitude in death are highly picturefque, and expressive of that ferocity of manners, which distinguished the northern nations.

† Tradition has handed down the name of this princefs. The bards call her Runo-forlo, which has no other fort of title for heing genuine, but its not being of Galic original; a difficietion, which the bards had not the art to preferve, when they feigned names for foreigners. The highland fenachies, who very often endeavoured to fupply the deficiency, they shought they found in the tales of Offian, have given us the continuation of the flory of the daughter of Suran-dronlo. The catastrophe is fo unnatural, and the circumstances of it for ridiculously pompous, that, for the sake of the inventors, I shall conceal them.

The wildly beautiful appearance of Runo-forlo, made a deep impression on a chief, some ages ago, who was himself no contemptible poet. The story is romantic, but not incredible,

Her eyes were wandering flames, amidit difordered locks. Forward is her white arm, with the fipear; her high-heaving breaft is feen, white as foamy waves that rife, by turns, amidit rocks. They are beautiful, but terrible, and mariners call the winds!"

"Come, ye dwellers of Loda!" fhe faid, "come, Carchar, pale in the midft of clouds! Sluthmor, that stridest in airy halls! Corchtur, terrible in winds! Receive, from his daughter's spear, the foes of Suran-dronlo. No shadow, at his roaring streams; no mildly-looking form was he! When he took up his spear, the hawks shook their founding wings: for blood was poured around the steps of dark-eyed Surandronlo. He lighted me, no harmless beam, to glitter on his streams. Like meteors, I was bright, but I blasted the foes of Suran-dronlo."

Nor unconcerned heard Sul-malla, the praise of Cathmor of shields. He was within her soul, tike a fire in secret heath, which awakes at the dible, if we make allowances for the lively imagination of a man of genius. Our chief failing, in a ftorm, along one of the illands of Orkney, faw a woman, in a boat, near the fhore, whom he thought, as he expresses it himself, as beautiful as a fudden ray of the fun, on the dark-heaving deep. The verses of Oslian, on the attitude of Runo-forlo, which was so familiar to that of the woman in the boat, wrought fo much on his fancy, that he fell desperately in love. The winds, however, drove him from the coast, and, after a few days, he arrived at his refidence in Scotland. There his paffion increafed to fuch a degree, that two of his friends, fearing the consequence, failed to the Orkneys, to carry to him the object of his defire. Upon enquiry they foon found the nymph, and carried her to the enamoured chief; but mark his furprize, when, instead of a ray of the fin, he saw a skinny fisherwoman, more than middle-aged, appearing before him. Tradition here ends the flory : but it may be cafily supposed that the passion of the chief foon subsided.

voice of the blaft, and fends its beam abroad. Amidft the fong removed the daughter of kings, like the voice of a fummer-breeze; when it lifts the heads of flowers, and curls the lakes and ftreams. The ruftling found gently fpreads o'er the vale, foftly-pleafing as it faddens the foul.

By night came a dream to Offian; formless food the shadow of Trenmor. He seemed to strike the dim shield, on Selma's streamy rock. I rose, in my rattling steel; I knew that war was near, before the winds our fails were spread; when Lumon shewed its streams to the morn.

Come from the watching of night, Malvina, lonely beam!

THE

WAR OF INIS-THONA:

4

P O E M.

ARGUMENT.

Reflections on the poet's youth. An apostrophe to Selma. Often obtains leave to go to Inis-thona, an island of Scandinavia. The mournful flory of Argon and Ruro, the two fons of the king of Inis-thona. Often revenges their death, and returns in triumph to Selma. A foliloguy by the poet himself.

WAR OF INIS-THONA:

Α.

\mathbf{E} M. P

OUR youth is like the dream of the hunter on the hill of heath. He fleeps in the mild beams of the fun; he awakes amidst a storm; the red lightning flies around: trees thake their heads to the wind! He looks back with joy, on the day of the fun; and the pleafant dreams of his reit! When shall Oslian's youth return? When his ear delight in the found of arms? When shall I, like Ofcar, travel in the light of my fteel? Come, with your ftreams, ye hills of Cona! liften to the voice of Offian. The fong rifes, like the fen, in my foul. I feel the joys of other times!

I behold thy towers, O Selma! the oaks of thy fhaded wall: thy ftreams found in my ear; thy heroes gather around. Fingal fits in the midit. He leans on the shield of Trenmor: his fpear stands against the wall; he listens to the fong of his bards. The deeds of his arm are heard; the actions of the king in his youth! Ofcar had returned from the chace, and heard the hero's H .

praife. He took the shield of Branno * from the wall; his eves were filled with tears. Red was the cheek of youth. His voice was trembling, low. My fpear shook its bright head in his hand:

he fpoke to Morven's king.

"Fingal! thou king of heroes! Offian, next to him in war! ye have fought in your youth; your names are renowned in fong. Ofcar is like the mist of Cona; I appear and I vanish away. The bard will not know my name. The hunter will not fearch in the heath for my tomb. Let me fight, O heroes, in the battles of Inis-Thona. Diftant is the land of my war! ye shall not hear of Ofcar's fall! Some bard may find me there; fome bard may give my name to fong. The daughter of the stranger shall see my tomb, and weep over the youth, that came from afar. The bard shall fay, at the feast, " hear the song of Ofcar from the diftant land !"

" Ofcar," replied the king of Morven; "thou shalt fight, fon of my fame! Prepare my dark-boformed flip to carry my hero to Inis-thona. Son of my fon, regard our fame; thou art of the race of renown! Let not the children of ftrangers fay, feeble are the fons of Morven! Be thou, in battle, a roaring from: mild as the evening fun in peace! Tell, Ofcar, to Inis-thona's king, that Fingal remembers his youth; when we strove in the combat together, in the days of Agandecca."

They listed up the founding fail; the wind whiftled through the thongs + of their masts. Wayes lash the oozy rocks; the fireigth of ocean

+ Leather thongs were used among the Celtic nations, inflead of ropes.

This is Branno, the father of Everallin, and grandfather to Ofcar; he was of Irish extraction, and lord of the country round the lake of Lego. His great actions are handed down by tradition, and his hospitality has passed into a proverb.

roars. My fon beheld, from the wave, the land of groves. He rushed into Runa's founding bay, and fent his sword to Annir of spears. The grey-haired hero rose, when he saw the sword of Fingal. His eyes were full of tears; he remembered his battles in youth. Twice had they listed the spear, before the lovely Agandeca: heroes stood far distant, as if two spirits were striving in winds.

"But now," began the king, "I am old; the fword lies useless in my hall. Thou, who art of Morven's race! Annir has seen the battle of spears; but now he is pale and withered, like the oak of Lano. I have no fon to meet thee with joy, to bring thee to the halls of his fathers. Argon is pale in the tomb, and Ruro is no more. My daughter is in the hall of strangers: she longs to behold my tomb. Her spouse shakes ten thousand spears; he comes a cloud of death from Lano. Come, to share the feast of Annir, son of echoing Morven!

Three days they feasted together; on the fourth, Annir heard the name of Oscar. They rejoiced in the shell †. They pursued the boars of Runa. Beside the fount of mostly stones, the weary heroes rest. The tear steals in secret from ^{*} Cormalo had refolved on a war againft his father-in-law-Annir king of Inis-thona, in order to deprive him of his kingdom: the injuttice of his defigns was fo much refented by Fingal, that he fent his grandfon, Ofear, to the affiltance of Annir. Both armies came foon to a battle, in which the conduct and valour of Ofear obtained a complete victory. An end was put to the war by the death of Cormalo, who fell in a fingle combat, by Ofear's hand. Thus is the ftory delivered down by tradition; though the poet, to raife the character of his fon, makes Ofear himfelf propose the expedition.

Annic :

[†] To rejoice in the skell, is a praise for feasing sumptuously and drinking freely.

Annir: he broke the rifing figh. "Here darkly reft," the hero faid, "the children of my youth. This ftone is the tomb of Ruro; that tree founds over the grave of Argon. Do ye hear my voice, O my fons, within your narrow house? Or do ye speak in these ruftling leaves, when the winds of the desart rise?"

"King of Inis-thona," faid Ofcar, "how fell the children of youth? The wild boar rufhes over their tombs, but he does not diffurb their repofe. They purfue deer * formed of clouds, and bend their airy bow. They fill love the fport of their youth; and mount the wind with iov."

"Cormalo," replied the king, " is a chief of ten thouland fpears. He dwells at the waters of Lano †, which fends forth the vapour of death. He came to Runa's echoing halls, and fought the honour of the fpear ‡. The youth was lovely as the first beam of the sun; few were they who could meet him in fight! My heroes yielded to Cormalo: my daughter was feized in his love. Argon and Ruro returned from the chace; the tears of their pride descend: they roll their filent eyes on Runa's heroes, who had yielded to a stranger. Three days they feasted with Cormalo: on the fourth young Argon fought. But who could fight with Argon! Cormalo is overcome. His heart fwelled with the grief of pride; he refolved in fecret, to behold the death of my fons. They went to the hills of Runa: they purfued the darkbrown hinds. The arrow of Cormalo flew in fecret; my children fell in blood. He came to the maid of his love; to Inis-thona's long-haired maid. They fled over the defart. Annir remained alone. Night came on and day appeared: nor Argon's voice, nor Ruro's came. At length their muchloved dog was feen; the fleet and bounding Runar. He came into the hall and howled; and feemed to look towards the place of their fall. We followed him : we found them here : we laid them by this mosfly stream. This is the haunt of Annir, when the chace of the hinds is past. I bend like the trunk of an aged oak; my tears for ever flow i"

† Lano was a lake of Scandinavia, remarkable, in the days of Offian, for emitting a peftilential vapour in autumn. And shou, O valignt Duchomar! like the mift of marfoy Lano; when it fails over the plains of autumn, and brings death to the hoft.

[•] The notion of Offian concerning the state of the deccased, was the same with that of the ancient Greeks and Romans. They imagined that the souls pursued, in their separate state, the employments and pleasures of their former life.

FINGAL, B. I. † By the honour of the spear, is meant the tournament practifed among the ancient northern nations.

"O Ronnan!" faid the rifing Ofcar, "Ogar king of spears! call my heroes to my fide, the fons of streamy Morven. To-day we go to Lano's water, that sends forth the vapour of death. Cormalo will not long rejoice: death is often at the point of our fwords!"

They came over the defart like flormy clouds, when the winds roll them along the heath: their edges are tinged with lightning; the echoing groves forefee the florm! The horn of Ofcar's battle is heard; Lano flook over all its waves. The children of the lake convened around the founding shield of Cormalo. Ofcar fought, as he was wont in war. Cormalo fell beneath his fword: the fons of difinal Lano fled to their fecret vales! Ofcar brought the daughter of Inisthona to Annir's echoing halls. The face of age is bright with joy; he bleft the king of fwords!

How great was the joy of Offian, when he beheld the diftant fail of his fon! it was like a cloud of light that rifes in the eaft, when the traveller is fad in a land unknown; and difinal night, with her ghofts, is fitting around in fhades! We brought him, with fongs, to Selma's halls. Fingal fpread the feaft of fhells. A thoufand bards raifed the name of Ofcar: Morven answered to the found. The daughter of Toscar was there; her voice was like the harp; when the distant found comes, in the evening, on the fost-rustling breeze of the vale!

O lay me, ye that fee the light, near fome rock of my hills? let the thick hazels be around, let the ruftling oak be near. Green be the place of my reft; let the found of the distant torrent be heard. Daughter of Toscar, take the harp. and raife the lovely fong of Selma; that fleep may overtake my foul in the midst of joy; that the dreams of my youth may return, and the days of the mighty Fingal. Selma! I behold thy towers, thy trees, thy fhaded wall! I fee the heroesof Morven; I hear the fong of bards! Ofcar lifts the fword of Cormalo; a thousand youths admire its fludded thongs. They look with won-der on my fon : They admire the strength of his: arm. They mark the joy of his father's eyes; they long for an equal fame. And ye shall have your fame, O fons of fireamy Morven! My foul. is often brightened with fong; I remember the friends of my youth. But fleep descends, in the found of the harp! pleafant dreams begin to rife! Ye fons of the chace ftand far diffant, nor diffurb my reft. The bard of other times holds discourse with his fathers, the chiefs of the days of old! Sons of the chace, frand far diffant! diffurb not the dreams of Offian!

THE

S O N G S

0 1

S E L M A.

ARGUMENT.

Address to the evening flar. An apostrophe to Fingal and his times. Minons sings before the king the song of the unfortunate Colma; and the bards exhibit other specimens of their poetical talents; according to an annual custom-established by the memarchs of the ancient Cale-donians.

SONGS OF SELMA.

STAR of descending night? fair is thy light in the west! thou liftest thy unshorn head from thy cloud: thy steps are stately on thy hill. What dost thou behold in the plain? The stormy winds are laid. The murmur of the torrent comes from afar. Roaring waves climb the distant rock. The flies of evening are on their seeble wings; the hum of their course is on the field. What dost thou behold, fair light? But thou dost simile and depart. The waves come with joy around thee: they bathe thy lovely hair. Farewel, thou filent beam? Let the light of Ossian's foul arise!

And it does arife in its ftrength! I behold my departed friends. Their gathering is on Lora, as in the days of other years. Fingal comes like a watery column of mift; his heroes are around: And fee the bards of fong, grey-haired Ullin! ftately Ryno! Alpin *, with the tuneful voice! the foft complaint of Minona! How are ye changed,

Alpin is from the fame root with Albion, or rather Albin, the ancient name of Britain; Alp, high Illand, or constry. The prefent name of our illand has its origin in the Celtic tongue; so that those who derive it from any other, betrayed their ignorance of the ancient language of our country. Brait or Brait, extensive; and in, land.

changed, my friends, fince the days of Selma's feaft? when we contended, like gales of fpring, as they fly along the hill, and bend by turns the feebly-whiftling grafs.

* Minona came forth in her beauty; with down-caft look and tearful eye. Her hair flew flowly on the blaft, that rufhed unfrequent from the hill. The fouls of the heroes were fad when the raifed the tuneful voice. Often had they feen the grave of Salgar†, the dark dwelling of white-bofomed Colma ‡. Colma left alone on the hill, with all her voice of fong! Salgar promifed to come: but the night defcended around. Hear the voice of Colma, when she fat alone on the hill!

COLMA.—It is night; I am alone, forlorn on the hill of storms. The wind is heard in the mountain. The torrent pours down the rock. No hut receives me from the rain; forlorn on the hill of winds !

Rife, moon! from behind thy clouds. Stars of the night, arife! Lead me, fome light, to the place, where my love refts from the chace alone! his bow near him, unfirung: his dogs panting around him. But here I muft fit alone, by the rock of the mostly ftream. The ftream and the wind roar aloud. I hear not the voice of my love! Why delays my Salgar, why the chief of the hill, his promise? Here is the rock, and here the tree! here is the roaring stream! Thou didst promise with night to be here. Ah! whither is my Salgar gone? With thee I would fly, from Offian introduces Minona, not in the ideal feete in his own mind, which he had deferibed; but at the annual feate of Selma, where the bards repeated their works before Fingal.

 Sealg-'er, a binter.

Cul-math, a women with fine bair.

from my father; with thee, from my brother of pride. Our race have long been focs; we are not foes, O Salgar!

Ceafe a little while, O wind! fiream, be thou filent a while! let my voice be heard around. Let my wanderer hear me! Salgar! it is Colma who calls. Here is the tree, and the rock. Salgar, my love! I am here. Why delayeft thou thy coming? Lo! the calm moon comes forth. The flood is bright in the vale. The rocks are grey on the fteep. I fee him not on the brow. His dogs come not before him, with tidings of his near approach. Here I must fit alone!

Who lie on the heath befide me? Are they my love and my brother? Speak to me, O my friend! To Colma they give no reply. Speak to me: I am alone! My foul is tormented with fears! Ah! they are dead! Their fwords are red from the fight. O my brother! my brother! why haft thou slain my Salgar? why, O Salgar! hast thou slain my brother? Dear were ye both to me! what shall I say in your praise? Thou wert sair on the hill among thousands! he was terrible in fight. Speak to me; hear my voice; hear me, sons of my love! They are sllent; silent for ever! Cold, cold are their breasts of clay! Oh! from the rock on the hill; from the top of the windy steep, speak, ye ghosts of the dead! speak, I will not be assaid! Whither are you gone to rest? In what cave of the hill shall I find the departed? No feeble voice is on the gale: no answer half-drowned in the storm!

I fit in my grief! I wait for morning in my tears! Rear the tomb, ye friends of the dead. Close it not till Colma come. My life flies away like a dream: why should I stay behind? Here shall I rest with my friends, by the stream of the founding rock. When night comes on the hill; when the loud winds arife; my ghost fhall fland in the blaft, and mourn the death of my friends. The hunter shall hear from his booth. He shall fear but love my voice! For fweet fhall my voice be for my friends: pleafant were her friends to Colma!

Such was thy fong, Minona, feftly blufhing daughter of Torman. Our tears descended for Colma, and our fouls were fad! Ullin came with his harp; he gave the fong of Alpin. The voice of Alpin was pleafant: the foul of Ryno was a beam of fire! But they had rested in the narrow house: their voice had ceased in Selma. Ullin had returned, one day, from the chafe, before the heroes fell. He heard their strife on the hill; their fong was foft but fad! They mourned the fall of Morar, first of mortal men ! His foul was like the foul of Fingal; his fword like the fword of Ofcar. But he fell, and his father mourned: his fifter's eyes were full of tears. Minona's eyes were full of tears, the fifter of car-borne Morar. She retired from the fong of Ullin, like the moon in the west, when flie forfees the shower, and hides her fair head in a cloud. I touched the harp, with Ullin; the fong of mourning refe!

RYNO. The wind and the rain are past: calm is the noon of day. The clouds are divided in heaven. Over the green hills flies the inconftant fun. Red through the ftony vale comes down the stream of the hill. Sweet are thy murmurs, O ftream! but more fweet is the voice I hear. It is the voice of Alpin, the fon of fong, mourning for the dead! Bent is his head

Thead of age; red his tearful eye. Alpin, thou fon of fong, why alone on the filent hill? why complained thou, as a blaft in the wood; as a wave on the lonely shore?

ALPIN. My tears, O Ryno! are for the dead; my voice for those that have passed away. Tall thou art on the hill; fair among the son of the vale. But thou shalt fall like Morar*; the mourner shall sit on thy tomb. The hills shall know thee no more; thy bow shall lie in the hall, unstrung!

Thou wert swift, O Morar! as a roe on the defart; terrible as a meteor of fire. Thy wrath was as the storm. Thy sword in battle, as lightning in the field. Thy voice was a stream after rain; like thunder on distant hills. Many fell by thy arm; they were consumed in the slames of thy wrath. But when thou didst return from war, how peaceful was thy brow! Thy face was like the sun after rain; like the moon in the silence of night; calm as the breast of the lake when the loud wind is laid.

Narrow is thy dwelling now! dark the place of thine abode! With three steps I compass thy grave, O thou who wast so great before! Four stones, with their heads of moss, are the only memorial of thee. A tree with scarce a leaf, long grass, which whistles in the wind, mark to the hunter's eye the grave of the mighty Morar. Morar! thou art low indeed. Thou hast no mourn thee; no maid with her tears of love. Dead is she that brought thee forth. Fallen is the daughter of Morglan.

Who on his staff is this? who is this, whose kead is white with age? whose eyes are red with tears? who quakes at every ftep? It is thy father *, O Morar! the father of no fon but thee. He heard of thy fame in war; he heard of foes dispersed. He heard of Morar's renown; why did he not hear of his wound? Weep, thou father of Morar! weep; but thy fon heareth thee not. Deep is the fleep of the dead; low their pillow of dust. No more shall he hear thy voice; no more awake at thy call. When shall it be morn in the grave, to bid the flumberer awake? Farewel, thou bravest of men! thou conqueror in the field! but the field shall see thee no more; nor the dark wood be lightened with the fplendor of thy fteel. Thou half left no fon. The fong shall preferve thy name. Future times shall hear of thee; they shall hear of the fallen Morar!

The grief of all arose, but most the bursting sigh of Armin +. He remembers the death of his fon, who fell in the days of his youth. Carmor t was near the hero, the chief of the echoing Galmal. Why burfts the figh of Armin, he faid? Is there a cause to mourn? The song comes, with its music, to melt and please the soul. It is like foft mift, that, rifing from a lake, pours on the filent vale; the green flowers are filled with dew, but the fun returns in his strength, and the mist is gone. Why art thou fad, O Armin! chief of fea-furrounded Gorma?

Sad! I am! nor finall is my cause of woe! Carmor, thou hast lost no fon; thou hast lost no daughter of beauty. Colgar the valiant lives; and Annira fairest maid. The boughs of thy house house ascend, O Carmor! but Armin is the last of his race. Dark is thy bed, O Daura! deep thy sleep in the tomb! When shalt thou awake with thy songs? with all thy voice of music?

^{*} Torman, the fon of Carthul, lord of I-mora, one of the western ifles.

[†] Armin, a bero. He was chief or petty king of Gorma, i. e. the blue island, supposed to be one of the Hebrides.

t Cear-mor, a tall dark-complexioned man.

Arife, winds of autumn, arife; blow along the heath! ftreams of the mountains roar! roar, tempefts, in the groves of my oaks! walk through broken clouds, O moon! show thy pale face, at intervals! bring to my mind the night, when all my children fell; when Arindal the mighty fell; when Daura the lovely failed! Daura, my daughter! thou wert fair; fair as the moon on Fura*; white as the driven snow; sweet as the breathing gale. Arindal, thy bow was strong. Thy spear was swift in the field. Thy look was like mist on the wave: thy shield, a red cloud in a storm. Armar, renowned in war, came, and fought Daura's love. He was not long refused: fair was the hope of their friends!

Erath, fon of Odgal, repined: his brother had been flain by Armor. He came difguifed like a fon of the fea: fair was his fkiff on the wave; white his locks of age; calm his ferious brow. Faireft of women, he faid, lovely daughter of Armin! a rock not diftant in the fea, bears a tree on its fide: red flaines the fruit afar! There Armor waits for Daura. I come to carry his love! She went; she called on Armar. Nought answered, but the fon † of the rock, Armar, my love! my love! why tormentest thou me with fear? hear fon of Arnart, hear: it is Daura who calleth thee! Erath the traitor fled laughing to the land. She lifted up her voice; the called for her brother and her father. Arindal! Armin! none to relieve your Daura!

^{*} Fuar-a, cold island.

[†] By the fan of the rock the poet means the echoing back of the human voice from a rock. The vulgar were of opinion, that this repetition of found was made by a fpirit within the rock; and they, on that account, called it ma: talla; the fan who wells in the rock.

Her voice came over the fea. Arindal my fon descended from the hill; rough in the spoils of the chace. His arrows rattled by his fide; his bow was in his hand: five dark grey dogs attend his fteps. He faw fierce Erath on the shore: he feized and bound him to an oak. Thick wind the thongs * of the hide around his limbs; he loads the wind with his groans. Arindal accends the deep in his boat, to bring Daura to land. Armar came in his wrath, and let fly the greyfeathered shaft. It fung; it funk in thy heart, O Arindal my fon! for Erath the traitor thou diedst. The oar is stopped at once; he panted on the rock and expired. What is thy grief, O Daura, when round thy feet is poured thy brother's blood! The boat is broken in twain. Armar plunges into the fea, to refcue his Daura, or die. Sudden a blaft from the hill came over the waves. He funk, and he rose no more.

Alone, on the fea-beat rock, my daughter was heard to complain. Frequent and loud were her cries. What could her father do? All night I food on the shore. I saw her by the faint beam of the moon. All night I heard her cries. Loud was the wind; the rain beat hard on the hill. Before morning appeared, her voice was weak. It died away, like the evening-breeze among the grass of the rocks. Spent with grief she expired; and left thee Armin alone. Gone is my strength in war! fallen my pride among women! When the storms aloft arise; when the north lifts the wave on high; I fit by the founding shore, and look on the fatal rock. Often by the setting moon, I see the ghosts of my children. Half-viewless, they walk in mournful conference together. Will none of you speak in pity? They do not regard their father. I am sad, O Carmor, nor small is my cause of woe!

^{*} The poet here only means that Erath was bound with leathern thongs.

Such were the words of the bards in the days of fong; when the king heard the music of harps, the tales of other times! The chiefs gathered from all their hills, and heard the lovely found. They praised the voice * of Cona! the first among a thousand bards! But age is now on my tongue: my foul has failed! I hear, at times, the ghosts of bards, and learn their pleasant fong. But memory fails on my mind. I hear the call of years! They say, as they pass along, why does Offian sing? Soon shall he lie in the narrow house, and no bard shall raise his same! Roll on, ye dark-brown years; ye bring no joy on your course! Let the tomb open to Offian, for his strength has failed. The sons of song are gone to rest. My voice remains, like a blast, that roars, lonely, on a sea-furrounded rock, after the winds are laid. The dark moss whistles there; the distant mariner sees the waving trees!

[.] Offian is fometimes poetically called the voice of Conz.

F I N G A L:

AN ANCIENT

E P I C P O E M

IN SIX BOOK 3.

ARGUMENT to Book I.

Cuthullin (general of the Irish-tribes, in the minority of Cormac, king of Ireland) fitting alone beneath a tree, at the gate of Tura, a castle of Ulster, (the other chiefs having gone on a hunting party to Cromla, a neighbouring hill) is informed of the landing of Swaran, king of Lochlin, by Moran, the fon of Fithil, one of his fcouts. He convenes the chiefs: a council is held, and disputes run high about giving battle to the enemy. Connal, the petty king of Togornia, and an intimate friend of Cuthullin, was for retreating, till Fingal, king of those Caledonians who inhabited the north-west coast of Scotland, whose aid had been previously folicited, should arrive; but Calmar, the fon of Matha, lord of Lara, a country in Connaught, was for engaging the enemy immediately. Cuthullin, of himself willing to fight, went into the opinion of Calmar. Marching towards the enemy, he miffed three of his bravest heroes, Fergus, Duchomar, and Cathba, Fergus arriving, tells Cuthullin of the death of the two other chiefs; which introduces the affecting epifode of Morna, the daughter of Cormac. The army of Cuthullin is descried at a distance by Swaran, who fent the fon of Arno to observe the motions of the enemy, while he himself ranged his forces in order of battle. The fon of Arno returning to Swaran, deferibes to him Cuthullin's chariot, and the terrible appearance of that hero. The armies engage, but night coming on, leaves the victory undecided. Cuthullin, according to the hospitality of the times, fends to Swaran a formal invitation to a feast, by his bard Carril, the fon of Kinfena. Swaran refuses to come. Carril relates to Cuthullin the flory of Grudar and Braffolis. A party, by Connal's advice, is fent to observe the enemy; which closes the action of the first day.

F I N G A L;

A'N ANCIENT

EPIC POEM

IN SIX BOOKS.

BOOK L

CUTHULLIN* fat by Tura's wall: by the tree of the rustling found. His spear leaned against a rock. His shield lay on grass, by his side. Amid his thoughts of mighty Carbar †, a hero

† Cairbar or Cairbre, fignifies a ftrong man,

^{*} Cuthullin the fon of Semo and grandfon to Caithbat, a Druid celebrated in tradition for his wifdom and valour. Cuthullin when very young married Bragela the daughter of Sorglan, and passing over into Ireland, lived for some time with Connal, grandfon by a daughter to Congal the petty king of Ulfter. His wifdom and valour in a fhort time gained him fuch reputation, that in the minority of Cormac the fupreme king of Ireland, he was chosen guardian to the young king, and fole manager of the war against Swaran king of Lochlin. After a feries of great actions he was killed in battle somewhere in Connaught, in the twenty-seventh year of his age. He was fo remarkable for his strength, that to defcribe a strong man it has passed into a proverb, " He has the strength of Cuthullin." They shew the remains of his palace at Dunfcaith in the Isle of Sky; and a stone to which he bound his dog Luath, goes still by his name.

a hero flain by the chief in war; the fcout * of ocean comes, Moran + the fon of Fithil!

"Arife," fays the youth, "Cuthullin, arife, I fee the ships of the north! Many, chief of men, are the foc. Many the heroes of the seasone Swaran!" "Moran!" replied the blue-eyed chief, "thou ever tremblest, son of Fithil! Thy fears have increased the foc. It is Fingal, king † of desarts, with aid to green Erin of streams." "I beheld their chief," says Moran, "tall as a glittering rock. His spear is a blasted pine. His shield the rising moon! He sat on the shore! like a cloud of mist on the silent hill! Many, chief of heroes! I said, many are our hands of war. Well art thou named, the Mighty Man: but many mighty men are seen from Tura's windy walls."

"He fpoke, like a wave on a rock, who in this land appears like me? Heroes stand not in my ^{*} Cuthullin having previous intelligence of the invalion intended by Swaran, fent fcouts all over the coast of Ullin or Ulfter, to give early notice of the first appearance of the enetay, at the same time that he fent Munan the fon of Stirmal to implore the affiftance of Fingal. He himfelf collected the flower of the Irish youth to Tura, a castle on the coast, to stop the progress of the enemy till Fingal should arrive from Scotland. We may conclude from Cuthullin's applying fo early for foreign aid, that the Irish were not then to numerous as they have fince been; which is a great prefumption against the high antiquities of that people. We have the testimony of Tacitus, that one legion only was thought fufficient, in the time of Agricola, to reduce the whole island under the Roman yoke; which would not probably have been the cafe had the island been inhabited for any number of centuries before.

⁺ Moran fignifies many; and Fithil, or rather Fili, an inferior bard.

[†] Fingal the fon of Comhal and Morna the daughter of Thaddu. His grandfather was Trathal, and great grandfather Trenmor, both of whom are often mentioned in the poem.

my presence: they fall to earth from my hand. Who can meet Swaran in fight? Who but Fingal, king of Selma of storms? Once we wrestled on Malmor*; our heels overturned the woods. Rocks fell from their place; rivulets, changing their course, sled murmuring from our side. Three days we renewed the strife; heroes stood at a distance and trembled. On the fourth, Fingal says, that the king of the ocean fell! but Swaran says, he stood! Let dark Cuthullin yield to him, that is strong as the storms of his land!"

"No!" replied the blue-eyed-chief, "I never yield to mortal man! Dark Cuthullin shall be great or dead! Go, son of Fithil, take my spear or dead! Go, son of Fithil, take my spear. Strike the sounding shield of Semo that hangs at Tura's rustling gate. The sound of peace is not its voice! My heroes shall hear and obey." He went. He struck the bosty shield. The hills, the rocks reply. The sound spreads along the wood: deer start by the lake of roes. Curach theaps from the sounding rock; and Connal of the bloody spear! Crugal's stream of snow beats high. The son of Favi leaves the dark-brown hind. It is the shield of war, said Ronnar! the spear of Cuthullin, said Lugar! son of the sea put on thy arms! Calmar lift thy sounding steel! Puno! dreadful hero, arise! Cairbar from thy red tree of Cromla! Bend thy knee, O Eth! descend from the streams · Meal-mór, a great hill.

S Cruth-geal, fair-complexioned.

[†] Cabait, or rather Cathbait, grandfather to the hero, was fo remarkable for his valour, that his fhield was made use of to alarm his posterity to the battles of the family. We find Fingal making the fame use of his own shield in the 4th book. A horn was the most common instrument to call the army together.

Cu-raoch fignifies the madness of battle .-

of Lena. Ca-olt! Stretch thy side as thou movest along the whistling heath of Mora: thy side that is white as the foam of the troubled sea, when the dark winds pour it on rocky Cuthon *.

Now I behold the chiefs, in the pride of their former deeds! Their fouls are kindled at the battles of old; at the actions of other times. Their eyes are flames of fire. They roll in fearch of the foes of the land. Their mighty hands are on their fwords. Lightning pours from their fides of fteel. They come like streams from the mountains; each rushes roaring from his hill. Bright are the chiefs of battle, in the armour of their fathers. Gloomy and dark their heroes follow, like the gathering of the rainy clouds behind the red meteors of heaven. The founds of crashing arms ascend. The grey dogs howl between. Unequal burits the fong of battle. Rocking Cromla + echoes round. On Lena's dusky heath they frand, like mift that shades the hills of autumn: when broken and dark it fettles high, and lifts its head to heaven!

"Hail," faid Cuthullin, "fons of the narrow vales! hail, hunters of the deer! Another iport is drawing near: It is like the dark rolling of that wave on the coaft! Or shall we fight, ye fons of war! or yield green Erin to Lochlin! O Connal || speak, thou first of men! thou

breaker

" Cu-thon, the mournful found of waves.

Ireland, fo called from a colony that fettled there called Falans. Inis-fail, the ifland of the Fa-il or Falans.

⁺ Crom-leach fignified a place of worship among the Druids. It is here the proper name of a hill on the coast of Ullin or Ulster.

I Connal, the friend of Cuthullin, was the fon of Caithhait prince of the Tongorma or the illand of blue waves, probably one of the Hebrides. His mother was Fioncoma the daughter breaker of the shields! thou hast often fought with Lochlin: wilt thou lift thy father's spear?

"Cuthullin!" calm the chief replied, "the fpear of Connal is keen. It delights to fhine in battle; to mix with the blood of thousands. But tho' my hand is bent on fight, my heart is for the peace of Erin *. Behold, thou first in Cormac's war, the fable fleet of Swaran. His mails are many on our coast, like reeds in the lake of Lego. His ships are forests clothed with mift, when the trees yield by turns to the fqually wind. Many are his chiefs in battle. Connal is for peace! Fingal would shun his arm the first of mortal men I Fingal, who scatters the mighty, as fromy winds the heath; when fireams roar thro' echoing Cona: and night fettles with all her clouds on the hill !

"Fly, thou, man of peace," faid Calmar f, "fly," faid the fon of Matha; "go, Connal,. to thy filent hills, where the ipear never. brightens in war! Purfue the dark-brown deer. of Cromla: stop with thine arrows the bounding roes of Lena. But, blue-eyed fon of Semo, Cuthullin, ruler of the field, featter thou the fons of Lochlin ‡; roar thro' the ranks of their pride. Let no veffel of the kingdom of Snow 15 bound daughter of Congal. He had a fon by Foba of Conacharneffar, who was afterwards petty king of Uliter. For his fervices in the war against Swaran he had lands conferred on him, which, from his name, were called Tir-chonnuil or Tir-connel, i. e. the land of Connal.

* Frin, a name of Ireland; from ear or iar West, and in an ifland. This name was not always confined to Ireland, for there is the highest probability that the Ierne of the ancients was Britain to the North of the Forth. For Ierne is faid to be to the North of Britain, which could not be meant of Ireland. STRABO, l. 2. & 4. CASAUB. l. 1.

+ Cálm-er, a strong man.

t The Galic name of Scandinavia in general.

bound on the dark-rolling waves of Inis-tore *. Rife, ye dark winds of Erin rife! roar whirl-winds of Lara of hinds! Amid the tempeft let me die, torn, in a cloud, by angry ghosts of men; amid the tempeft let Calmar die, if ever chase was sport for him, so much as the battle of shields!"

"Calmar!" Connal flow replied, "I never fled, young fon of Matha! I was fwift with my friends in fight; but finall is the fame of Connal! The battle was won in my prefence; the valiant overcame! But, fon of Semo, hear my voice, regard the ancient throne of Cormac. Give wealth and half the land for peace, till Fingal shall arrive on our coast. Or, if war be thy choice, I lift the sword and spear. My joy shall be in the midst of thousands; my foul shall lighter themselved by the same face of the face."

lighten through the gloom of the fight !"

"To me," Cuthullin replies, "pleafant is the noise of arms! pleafant as the thunder of heaven, before the shower of spring! But gather all the thining tribes that I may view the fons of war! Let them pass along the heath, bright as the fun-shine before a storm; when the west wind collects the clouds and Morven echoes over all her oaks! But where are my friends in battle? The fupporters of my arm in danger? Where art thou, white-bosom'd Câthba? Where is that cloud in war, Duchômar +? Hast thou left me, O Fergus !! in the day of the ftorm? Fergus, first in our joy at the feast ! fon of Rossa! arm of death! comest thou like a roe from Malmor. Like a hart from thy echoing hills? Hail thou fon of Roffa! what thades the foul of war?"

" Four

^{*} The Orkney islands.

[†] Dubhchomar, a black well-made man.

[†] Fear-guth, the man of the word; or a commander of an army.

"Four stones *," replied the chief, "rise on the grave of Câthba. These hands have laid in earth Duchômar, that cloud in war! Câthba, son of Tornan! thou wert a sun-beam in Erin. And thou, O valiant Duchômar! a mist of the marthy Lano; when it moves on the plains of autumn, bearing the death of thousands along. Morna! fairest of maids! calm is thy sleep in the cave of the rock! Thou hast fallen in darkness, like a star, that shoots across the defart; when the traveller is alone, and mourns the transient beam!"

"Say," faid Semo's blue-eyed fon, "fay how fell the chiefs of Erin? Fell they by the fons of Lochlin, striving in the battle of heroes? Or what confines the strong in arms to the dark.

and narrow house?"

"Câthba," replied the hero, "fell by the fword of Duchômar at the oak of the noify freans. Duchômar came to Tura's cave; he fpoke to the lovely Morna. Morna†, faireft among women, lovely daughter of frong-armed Cormac! Why in the circle of frones, in the cave of the rock alone? The fream murmurs along. The old tree groans in the wind. The lake is troubled before thee; dark are the clouds of the fky! But thou art fnow on the heath; thy hair is the mift of Cromla; when it curls on the hill; when it shines to the beam of the west ! Thy breafts are two fmooth rocks feen from Branno of ftreams. Thy arms, like two white pillars, in the halls of the great Fingal."

^{*} This passage alludes to the manner of burial among the ancient Scots. They opened a grave six or eight feet deep; the bottom was lined with fine clay; and on this they laid the body of the deceased, and, if a warrior, his sword, and the beads of twelve arrows by his side. Above they laid another-stratum of clay, in which they placed the horn of a deer, the symbol of hunting. The whole was covered with a fine mold, and sour stones placed on each end to mark the extent of the grave. These are the four stones alluded to here,

Muirne, or Morna, a woman beloved by all,

"From whence," the fair-haired maid replied, "from whence, Duchômar, most gloomy of men? Dark are thy brows and terrible! Red are thy rolling eyes! Does Swaran appear on the fea? What of the foe, Duchômar?" "From the hill I return, O Morna, from the hill of the dark-brown hinds. Three have I flain with my bended yew. Three with my long bounding dogs of the chace. Lovely daughter of Cormac, I love thee as my foul! I have flain one stately deer for thee. High was his branchy head; and fleet his feet of wind." "Duchômar!" calm the maid replied, "I love thee not, thou gloomy man! hard is thy heart of rock; dark is thy terrible brow. But Cathba, young fon of Torman*, thou art the love of Morna. Thou art a fun-beam, in the day of the gloomy ftorm. Sawest thou the fon of Torman, lovely on the hill of his hinds? Here the daughter of Cormac waits the coming of Câthba!"

" Long shall Morna wait," Duchômar faid, "long shall Morna wait for Cathba! Behold this fword unsheathed! Here wanders the blood of Cathba. Long shall Morna wait. He fell by the fiream of Branno! On Croma I will raife his tomb, daughter of blue-shielded Cormac! Turn on Duchômar thine eyes; his arm is strong as a storm." "Is the fon of Torman tallen?' faid the wildly buriting voice of the maid. "Is he fallen on his echoing hills, the youth with the breaft of fnow? The first in the chace of hinds? The foe of the ftrangers of ocean? Thou art dark * to me, Duchômar, cruel is thine arm to Morna! Give me that fword. my foe! I love the wandering blood of Cathba!"

^{*} Torman, thunder. This is the true origin of the Jupiter Taramis of the ancients.

He gave the fword to her tears. She pierced his manly breaft! He fell, like the bank of a mountain-stream, and stretching forth his hand, he fpoke: " Daughter of blue-shielded Cormac! Thou haft flain me in youth! The fword is cold in my breast: Morna, I feel it cold. Give me to Moina + the maid. Duchômar was the dream of her night! She will raife my tomb; the hunter shall raise my fame. But draw the sword from my breaft. Morna, the fteel is cold!" She came, in all her tears, fhe came; fhe drew the fword from his breaft. He pierced her white fide! He fpread her fair locks on the ground! Her burfting blood founds from her fide: her white arm is ftained with red. Rolling in death fhe lay. The cave re-echoed to her fighs."

"Peace," faid Cuthullin, "to the fouls of the heroes! their deeds were great in fight. Let them ride around t me on clouds. Let them fhew their features of war. My foul shall then be firm in danger; mine arm like the thunder of heaven! But be thou on a moon-beam, O Morna! near the window of my rest; when my thoughts are of peace; when the din of arms is past. Gather the strength of the tribes! Move to the wars of Erin! Attend the car of my battles! Rejoice in the noife of my course! Place three spears by my fide: follow the bounding of my fleeds! That my foul may be ftrong in my friends, when battle darkens round the beams of my fteel!"

^{*} She alludes to his name, the dark man.

[†] Moina, foft in temper and person.

t It was the opinion then, as indeed it is to this day, of fome of the Highlanders, that the fouls of the deceased hovered round their living friends; and fometimes appeared to them when they were about to enter on any great undertaking.

As rushes a stream of foam from the dark shady deep of Cromla; when the thunder is travelling above, and dark-brown night fits on half the hill. Through the breaches of the tempest look forth the dim faces of ghosts. So fierce, so vast. fo terrible rushed on the fons of Erin. The chief like a whale of ocean, whom all his billows purfue, poured valour forth, as a stream, rolling his might along the shore. The sons of Lochlin heard the noise, as the found of a winter-storm. Swaran ftruck his boffy fhield: he called the fon of Arno, "What murmur rolls along the hill, like the gathered flies of the eve? The fons of Erin descend, or rustling winds roar in the distant wood! Such is the noise of Gormal, before the white tops of my waves arife. O fon of Arno, afcend the hill; view the dark face of the heath!"

He went. He, trembling, fwift returned. His eyes rolled wildly round. His heart beat high against his side. His words were faultering, " Arife, fon of ocean, arife, broken, flow. chief of the dark-brown shields! I fee the dark, the mountain-ftream of battle! The deep-moving strength of the sons of Erin! The car, the car of war comes on, like the flame of death! the rapid car of Cuthullin, the noble fon of. Semo! It bends behind like a wave near a rock; like the fun-ftreaked mift of the heath. Its fides are emboffed with ftones, and sparkle like the fea. round the boat of night. Of polished yew is its beam ; beam; its feat of the smoothest bone. The sides are replenished with spears; the bottom is the foot-stool of heroes! Before the right side of the car is seen the snorting horse! The high-maned, broad-breasted, proud, wide-leaping, strong steed of the hill. Loud and resounding is his hoof; the spreading of his mane above is like a stream of smoke on a ridge of rocks. Bright are the sides of the steed! his name is Sulin-Sifadda!"

"Before the left fide of the car is feen the fnorting horse! The thin-maned, high-headed, strong-hoosed, fleet, bounding son of the hill: his name is Dusronnal, among the stormy sons of the sword! A thousand thongs bind the car on high. Hard polished bits shine in a wreath of soam. Thin thongs, bright-studded with gems, bend on the stately necks of the steeds. The steeds that like wreaths of mist sty over the streamy vales! The wildness of deer is in their course, the strength of eagles descending on the prey. Their noise is like the blast of winter, on the sides of the snow-headed Gormal.

"Within the car is feen the chief; the strong-armed fon of the sword. The hero's name is Cuthullin, son of Semo king of shells. His red cheek is like my polished yew. The look of his blue-rolling eye is wide, beneath the dark arch of his brow. His hair flies from his head like a flame, as bending forward he wields the spear. Fly, king of occan, sly! He comes, like a storm, along the streamy vale!"

"When did I fly!" replied the king? "When fled Swaran from the battle of fpears? When did I shrink from danger, chief of the little foul? I met the storm of Gormal, when the foam of my waves beat high. I met the storm of the clouds; shall Swaran sly from a hero? Were Fingal himself before me, my foul should not darken with fear. Arise to battle, my thousands? pour round me like the echoing main. Gatherround the bright feel of your king; ftrong as the rocks of my land; that meet the from with joy, and ftretch their dark pines to the wind !"

Fing2l

Like autumn's dark ftorms, pouring from two echoing hills, towards each other approached the heroes. Like two deep streams from high rocks meeting, mixing, roaring on the plain; loud, rough and dark in battle meet Lochlin and Inis-fail. Chief mixes his strokes with chief. and man with man; fleel, clanging, founds on fteel. Helmets are cleft on high. Blood burfts and fmokes around. Strings murmur on the polished yews. Darts rush along the iky. Spears. fall like the circles of light, which gild the face of night. As the noise of the troubled ocean, when roll the waves on high. As the last peal of thunder in heaven, fuch is the din of war! Though Cormac's hundred bards were there, to give the fight to fong; feeble was the voice of a hundred bards to fend the deaths to future times! For many were the deaths of heroes; while poured the blood of the brave!

Mourn, ye fons of fong, mourn the death of the noble Sithâllin *. Let the fighs of Fiona rife, on the lone plains of her lovely Ardan. They fell, like two hinds of the defart, by the hands of the mighty Swaran; when, in the midst of thousands, he roared; like the shrill fpirit of a ftorm, He fits dim, on the clouds of the north, and enjoys the death of the mariner.

Nor

^{*} Sithallin fignifics a handsome man; Fiona, a fair maid; and Ardan, pride.

Nor flept thy hand by thy fide, chief of the isle of mist *! many were the deaths of thine arm, Cuthullin, thou son of Semo! His sword was like the beam of heaven when it pierces the sons of the vale; when the people are blasted and fall, and all the hills are burning around. Dustronnal + snorted over the bodies of heroes. Sifadda ‡ bathed his hoof in blood. The battle lay behind them, as groves overturned on the desart of Cromla; when the blast has passed the heath, laden with the spirits of night!

Weep on the rocks of roaring winds, O maid of Iniftore || ! Bend thy fair head over the waves, thou lovelier than the ghoft of the hills; when it moves, in a funbeam, at noon, over the filence of Morven! He is fallen! thy youth is low! pale beneath the fword of Cuthullin! No more shall valour raise thy love to match the blood of kings. Trenar, graceful Trenar, died, O maid of Inistore! His grey dogs are howling at home; they see his passing ghost. His bow is in the hall unstrung. No found is in the hill of his hinds!

As

^{*} The Isle of Sky; not improperly called the isle of mist, as its high hills, which catch the clouds from the western ocean, occasion almost continual rains.

⁺ One of Cuthullin's horfes. Dubhstron gheal.

Sith-fadda, i. e. a long firide.

If The maid of Iniflore was the daughter of Gorlo king of Iniflore or Orkney iflands. Trenar was brother to the king of Iniflore, flippfoed to be one of the iflands of Shetland. The Orkneys and Shetland were at that time fubject to the king of Lochlin. We find that the dogs of Trenar are fenfible at home of the death of their maiter, the very inflant he is killed. It was the opinion of the times, that the fouls of heroes went immediately after death to the hills of their country, and the feenes they frequented the most happy time of their life. It was thought too that dogs and horses faw the ghosts of the deceased.

As roll a thousand waves to the rocks, so Swaran's hoft come on. As meets a rock a thousand waves, so Erin met Swaran of spears; Death raifes all his voices around, and mixes with the founds of fhields. Each hero is a pillar of darkness; the fword a beam of fire in his hand. The field echoes from wing to wing, as a hundred hammers that rife, by turns, on the red fon of the furnace. Who are these on Lena's heath, these so gloomy and dark? Who are these like two clouds and their fwords like lightning above them? The little hills are troubled around; the rocks tremble with all their moss. Who is but Ocean's fon and the car-borne chief of Erin? Many are the anxious eyes of their friends, as they fee them dim on the heath. But night conceals the chiefs in clouds, and ends the dreadful fight!

It was on Cromla's shaggy side that Dorglas had placed the deer *; the early fortune of the chace, before the heroes left the hill. A hundred youths collect the heath; ten warriors wake the fire; three hundred chuse the polish'd stones. The feast is smoaking wide! Cuthullin chief of Erin's war, refumed his mighty foul. He stood upon his beamy spear, and spoke to the son of fongs; to Carril of other times, the grey-haired fon of Kinfena +. "Is this feaft foread for me

* The ancient manner of preparing feafts after hunting, is handed down by tradition. A pit lined with finooth flones was made; and near it flood a heap of fmooth flat flones of the flint kind. The stones as well as the pit were properly heated with heath. Then they laid fome venifon in the bottom, and a stratum of the stones above it; and thus they did alternately till the pit was fell. The whole was covered over with heath to confine the fteam. Whether this is probable I cannot fay; but fome pits are flewn, which the vulgar fay, were used in that manner.

⁺ Cean-feana, i. e. the bead of the people.

alone and the king of Lochlin on Erin's shore; far from the deer of his hills, and sounding halls of his feasts? Rife, Carril of other times; carry my words to Swaran. Tell him from the roaring of waters, that Cuthullin gives his feast. Here let him listen to the sound of my groves, amidst the clouds of night. For cold and bleak the blustering winds rush over the soam of his seas. Here let him praise the trembling harp, and hear the fongs of heroes!"

Old Carril went, with foftest voice. He called the king of dark-brown shields! "Rise from the skins of thy chace, rise, Swaran king of groves! Cuthullin gives the joy of shells. Partake the feast of Erin's blue-eyed chief!" He answered like the fullen found of Cromla before a storm. 66 Though all thy daughters, Inis-fail! should ftretch their arms of fnow; fhould raife the heavings of their breafts, and foftly roll their eyes of love; yet, fixed as Lochlin's thousand rocks, here Swaran should remain; till morn, with the young beams of the east, shall light me to the death of Cuthullin. Pleafant to my ear is Lochlin's wind! It rushes over my seas! It speaks aloft in all my fhrouds, and brings my green forests to my mind: The green forests of Gormai, which often echoed to my winds, when my fpear was red in the chace of the boar. Let dark Cuthullin yield to me the ancient throne of Cosmac; or Erin's torrents shall shew from their hills the red foam of the blood of his pride!"

"Sad is the found of Swaran's voice," faid Carril of other times! "Sad to himfelf alone," faid the blue-eyed fon of Semo. "But, Carril, raife the voice on high; tell the deeds of other times. Send thou the night away in fong; and give the joy of grief. For many heroes and maids of love, have moved on Inis-fail: And lovely are the fongs of woe that are heard in Albion's rocks; when the noise of the chace is past, and the streams of Cona answer to the voice of Oslian *."

" In other days +," Carril replies, "came the fons of Ocean to Erin! A thousand vessels bounded on waves to Ullin's lovely plains. The fons of Inis-fail arose, to meet the race of dark-brown shields. Cairbar, first of men, was there, and Grudar, stately youth! Long had they strove for the spotted bull, that lowed on Golbun's ‡. echoing heath. Each claimed him as his own. Death was often at the point of their steel! Side by fide the heroes fought; the strangers of the Ocean fled. Whose name was fairer on the hill, than the name of Cairbar and Grudar ! But ah ! why ever lowed the bull, on Golbun's echoing heath. They faw him leaping like fnow. The wrath of the chiefs returned. !"

On Lubar's | graffy banks they fought; Grudar fell in his blood, Fierce Cairbar came to the vale, where Braffolis &, faireft of his fifters, all alone, raifed the fong of grief. She fung of the actions of Grudar, the youth of her fecret: foul! She mourned him in the field of blood;

hut

^{*} The Cona here mentioned is that finall river that runs through Glenco in Argyleshire. One of the hills which envizon that romantic valley is ftill called Scornafena, or the hill of Fingal's people.

[†] This epifode is introduced with propriety. Calmar and. Connal, two of the Irish heroes, had disputed warmly before the battle about engaging the enemy. Carril endeavours to reconcile them with the flory of Cairbar and Grudar; who, though enemies before, fought fide by fide in the war. The poet obtained his aim, for we find Calmar and Connal perfeetly reconciled in the third book.

[#] Golb-bhean, as well as Cromleach, fignifies a crooked hill. | Lubar, a river in Uliter. Labhar, loud, noify.

[§] Braffolis fignifies a reoman with a rebite breaft.

but still she hoped for his return. Her white bofom is feen from her robe, as the moon from the clouds of night, when its edge heaves white on the view, from the darkness which covers its orb. Her voice was fofter than the harp to raise the fong of grief. Her foul was fixed on Grudar. The fecret look of her eye was his. "When shalt thou come in thine arms, thou mighty in the war ?"

"Take, Braffolis," Cairbar came and faid, take, Braffolis, this fhield of blood. Fix it on high within my hall, the armour of my foe! Her foft heart beat against her side. Distracted, pale, she flew. She found her youth in all his blood; fhe died on Cromla's heath. Here refts their dust, Cuthullin! these lonely yews sprung from their tombs, and shade them from the storm. Fair was Braffolis on the plain! Stately was Grudar on the hill! The bard shall preserve their names, and fend them down to future times!"

"Pleafant is thy voice, O Carril," faid the blue-eyed chief of Erin. "Pleafant are the words of other times! They are like the calm shower of spring; when the fun looks on the field, and the light cloud flies over the hills. O ftrike the harp in praise of my love, the lonely fun-beam of Dunscaith! Strike the harp in the praise of Bragéla; she that I left in the isle of Mist, the spouse of Semo's son! Dost thou raise thy fair face from the rock to find the fails of Cuthullin? The fea is rolling diftant far; its white foam deceives thee for my fails. Retire, for it is night, my love; the dark winds fing in thy hair. Retire to the halls of my feafts; think of the times that are past. I will not return till the ftorm of war is ceased. O Connal! speak of war and arms, and fend her from my mind. Lovely Lovely with her flowing hair is the white-bosomed daughter of Sorglan."

Connal, flow to fpeak, replied, "Guard against the race of Ocean. Send thy troop of night abroad, and watch the strength of Swaran. Cuthullin! I am for peace till the race of Selma come: till Fingal come, the first of men, and beam, like the sun, on our fields!" The hero struck the shield of alarms, the warriors of the night moved on! The rest lay in the heath of the deer, and slept beneath the dusky wind. The ghoss* of the lately dead were near, and swam on the gloomy clouds: And far distant, in the dark silence of Lena, the feeble voices of death were faintly heard.

* It was long the opinion of the ancient Scots, that a ghost was heard shricking near the place where a death was to happen soon after. The accounts given, to this day, among the vulgar, of this extraordinary matter, are very poetical. The ghost comes mounted on a meteor, and surrounds twice or thrice the place defined for the person to die; and then goes along the road through which the suneral is to pass, shricking at intervals; at last, the meteor and ghost disappear above the burial-place.

F I N G A L:

AN ANCIENT

EPICPOEM.

BOOKAL

ARGUMENT to BOOK II.

The ghost of Crugal, one of the Irish heroes who was killed in battle, appearing to Connal, foretells the defeat of Cuthullin in the next battle; and earnestly advises him to make peace with Swaran. Connal communicates the vision; but Cuthullin is inflexible; from a principle of honour he would not be the first to sue for peace, and he resolved to continue the war. Morning comes; Swaran propofes dishonourable terms to Cuthullin, which are rejected. The battle begins, and is obstinately fought for some time, until, upon the flight of Grumal, the whole Irish army gave way. Cuthullin and Connal cover their retreat : Carril leads them to a neighbouring hill, whither they are foon followed by Cuthullin himfelf, who deferies the fleet of Fingal making towards the coast; but, night coming on, he loft fight of it again. Cuthullin, dejected after his defeat, attributes his ill fuccess to the death of Ferda his friend, whom he had killed fome time before. Carril, to shew that ill fuccess did not always attend those who innocently killed their friends, introduces the epifode of Comal and Galvina.

F I N G A L:

AN ANCIENT

EPIC POEM.

IN SIX BOOKS.

BOOK II,

 $\mathbf{C}_{ ext{O}}$ N N A L * lay by the found of the mountain stream, beneath the aged tree. A stone, with its mofs, supported his head. Shrill thro' the heath of Lena, he heard the voice of night. At distance from the heroes he lay; the son of the fword feared no foe! The hero beheld, in his reft, a dark-red stream of fire rushing down from the hill. Crugal fat upon the beam, a chief who fell in fight. He fell by the hand of Swaran, striving in the battle of heroes. His face is like the beam of the fetting moon. His robes are of the clouds of the hill. His eyes are two decaying flames. Dark is the wound of his breaft! "Crugal," faid the mighty Connal, for of Dedgal famed on the hill of hinds! " Why fo pale and fad, thou breaker of the shields? Thou Vol. I. haff hast never been pale for fear! What disturbs the departed Crugal?" Dim and in tears, he stood and stretched his pale hand over the hero. Faintly he raifed his feeble voice, like the gale of the reedy Lego!

^{*} The fcene here described will appear natural to those who have been in the highlands of Scotland. The poet removes him to a distance from the army, to add more horror to the description of Crugal's ghost by the loneliness of the place.

"My fpirit, Connal, is on my hills: my corfe on the fands of Erin. Thou shalt never talk with Crugal, nor find his lone steps in the heath. I am light as the blaft of Cromla. I move like the fhadow of mift! Connal, fon of Colgar, I fee a cloud of death: it hovers dark over the plains of Lena. The fons of green Erin must fall. Remove from the field of ghosts." Like -the darkened moon he retired, in the midst of the whiftling blaft. "Stay," faid the mighty Connal, "fray my dark-red friend. Lay by that beam of heaven, fon of the windy Cromla! What cave is thy lonely house? What green-headed hill the place of thy repose? Shall we not hear thee in the ftorm? In the noise of the mountainfiream? When the feeble fons of the wind come forth, and fearcely feen, pass over the defart?"

The foft-voiced Connal rose, in the midst of his founding arms. He struck his shield above Cuthullin. The fon of battle waked. " Why," faid the ruler of the car, " comes Connal through my night? My fpear might turn against the found; and Cuthullin mourn the death of his friend. Speak Connal; fon of Colgar, speak, thy counsel is the son of heaven!" "Son of Semo!" replied the chief, " the ghost of Crugal came from his cave. The stars dim-twinkled through his form. His voice was like the found of a distant stream. He is a messenger of death! He speaks of the dark and narrow house! Sue for peace, O chief of Erin! or fly over the heath of Lena."

"He fpoke to Connal," replied the hero, though ftars dim-twinkled through his form! Son of Colgar, it was the wind that murmured across thy ear. Or if it was the form of Crugal, why didst thou not force him to my fight? Hast thou enquired where is his cave? The house of that son of wind? My sword might find that voice, and force his knowledge from Crugal. But small is his knowledge, Connal; he was here to-day. He could not have gone beyond our hills! who could tell him there of our fall?" "Ghosts who could tell him there of our fall?" Ghosts voice of wildom. "They rest together in their caves, and talk of mortal men."

"Then let them talk of mortal men; of every man but Erin's chief. Let me be forgot in their cave. I will not fly from Swaran! If fall I must, my tomb shall rife, amidst the same of future times. The bunter shall shed a tear on my stone; forrow fhall dwell round the high-bofomed Bragéla. I fear not death, to fly I fear! Fingal has feen me victorious! Thou dim phantom of the hill, fhew thyfelf to me! come on thy beam of heaven, fliew me my death in thine hand; yet I will not fly, thou feeble fon of the wind! Go, fon of Colgar, strike the shield. It hangs between the spears. Let my warriors rise to the found, in the midst of the battles of Erin. Though Fingal delays his coming with the race of his ftormy ifles; we shall fight, O Colgar's fon, and die in the battle of heroes!"

K 2

The

The poet-teaches us the opinions that prevailed in his time concerning the flate of feparate fouls. From Connal's expression, "That the flars dim-twinkled through the form of Crugal," and Cuthullin's reply, we may gather that they both thought the foul was material; fomething like the είδαλου of the ancient Greeks.

The found fpreads wide. The heroes rife, like the breaking of a blue-rolling wave. They ftood on the heath, like oaks with all their branches round them; when they echo to the ftream of froft, and their withered leaves are ruftling to the wind! High Cromla's head of clouds is grey. Morning trembles on the half-enlightened ocean. The blue mift fwims flowly by, and hides the fons of Inis-fail!

"Rife ye," faid the king of the dark-brown shields, "ye that came from Lochlin's waves. The fons of Erin have fled from our arms; purfue them over the plains of Lena! Morla, go to Cormac's hall. Bid them yield to Swaran; before his people fink to the tomb; and filence spread over his ifle." They rose rustling like a flock of sea-fowl, when the waves expel them from the shore. Their sound was like a thousand streams that meet in Cona's vale, when, after a stormy might, they turn their dark eddies, beneath the pale light of the morn.

As the dark shades of autumn fly over hills of grass: so gloomy, dark, successive came the chiefs of Lochlin's echoing woods. Tall as the stag of Morven, moved stately before them the king. His shining shield is on his side, like a stame on the heath at night. When the world is silent and dark, and the traveller sees some ghost sporting in the beam! Dimly gleam the hills around and shew indistinctly their oaks! A blast from the troubled ocean removed the settled mist. The sons of Erin appear, like a ridge of rocks on the coast; when mariners, on shores unknown, are trembling at vecring winds!

"Go, Morla, go," faid the king of Lochlin, offer peace to these! Offer the terms we give to kings, when nations bow down to our swords.
When

When the valiant are dead in war; when virgins weep on the field!" Tall Morla came, the fon of Swarth, and stately strode the youth along! He spoke to Erin's blue-eyed chief, among the lessences. "Take Swaran's peace," the warrior spoke, "the peace he gives to kings, when nations bow to his sword. Leave Erin's streamy plains to us, and give thy spouse and dog. Thy spouse high-bosom'd, heaving fair! Thy dog that overtakes the wind! Give these to prove the weakness of thine arm; live then beneath our power!"

"Tell Swaran, tell that heart of pride, Cuthullin never yields. I give him the dark rolling fea; I give his people graves in Erin. But never shall a stranger have the pleasing fun-beam of my love. No deer shall fly on Lochlin's hills, before swiftfooted Luath." " Vain ruler of the car," faid Morla, " wilt thou then fight the king? The king whose ships of many groves could carry off thine isle? So little is thy green-hilled Erin to him who rules the stormy waves!" " In words I yield to many, Morla. My fword shall yield to none. Erin shall own the sway of Cormac, while Connal and Cuthullin live! Ó Connal, first of mighty men, thou hear'st the words of Morla. Shall thy thoughts then be of peace, thou breaker of the shields? Spirit of fallen Crugal! why didst thou threaten us with death? The narrow house shall receive me, in the midst of the light of renown. Exalt, ye fons of Erin, exalt the spear and bend the bow: rush on the foe in darkness, as the spirits of stormy nights!"

Then difmal, roaring, fierce, and deep the gloom of battle poured along: as mift that is rolled on a valley, when from invade the filent fun-shine of heaven! Cuthullin moves before in arms, like an angry ghost before a cloud; when meteors enclose him with fire; when the dark winds are in his hand. Carril, far on the heath, bids the horn of battle found. He raises the voice of song, and pours his soul into the minds of the brave.

"Where," faid the mouth of the fong, " where is the fallen Crugal? He lies forgot on earth; the hall of fhells * is filent. Sad is the spouse of Crugal! She is a stranger + in the hall of her grief. But who is she, that, like a funbeam, flies before the ranks of the foe? It is Degrena t, lovely fair, the spouse of fallen Crugal. Her hair is on the wind behind. Her eye is red; her voice is shrill. Pale, empty is thy Crugal now! His form is in the cave of the hill. He comes to the ear of rest; he raises his feeble voice; like the humming of the mountain-bee; like the collected flies of the eve! But Degrena falls like a cloud of the morn; the fword of Lochlin is in her fide. Cairbar, fhe is fallen, the rinng thought of thy youth. She is fallen, O Cairbar, the thought of thy youthful hours !"

Fierce Cairbar heard the mournful found. He rushed along like ocean's whale. He saw the death of his daughter: He roared in the midst of thousands. His spear met a son of Lochlin! battle spreads from wing to wing! As a hundred winds in Lochlin's groves; as fire in the pines of a hundred hills; so loud, so ruinous, so vast the ranks of men are hearn down. Cuthullin cut off

hero2s

| Deo-grena fignifies a fun-beam.

^{*} The ancient Scots, as well as the prefent Highlanders, drunk in fhells; hence it is that we fo often meet, in the old poetry, with the chief of fiells, and the halls of fiells.

⁺ Crugal had married Degrena but a little time before the battle, confequently she may with propriety be called a stranger in the hall of her grief.

heroes like thiftle; Swaran wafted Erin. Carach fell by his hand, Cairbar of the boffy thield! Morglan lies in lafting reft! Ca-olt trembles as he dies! His white breaft is ftained with blood; his yellow hair firetched in the duft of his native land! He often had fipread the feaft where he fell. He often there had raifed the voice of the harp: When his dogs lept around for joy; and the youths of the chace prepared the bow!

Still Swaran advanced, as a stream, that bursts from the desart. The little hills are rolled in its course; the rocks are half-funk by its side! But Cuthullin stood before him, like a hill, that catches the clouds of heaven. The winds contend on its head of pines; the hall rattles on its rocks. But, firm in its strength, it stands, and shades the silent vale of Cona! So Cuthullin shaded the sons of Erin, and stood in the midst of thousands. Blood rifes like the fount of a rock, from panting heroes around. But Erin falls on either wing, like snow in the day of the fun.

" O-fons of Erin," faid Grumal, " Lochlin conquers on the field. Why ftrive we as reeds against the wind? Fly to the hill of darkbrown hinds." He fled like the ftag of Morven; his spear is a trembling beam of light behind him. Few fled with Grumal, chief of the little foul: they fell in the battle of heroes, on Lena's echoing heath. High on his car, of many gems, the chief of Erin stood. He slew a mighty son of Lochlin, and spoke, in haste, to Connol. "O Connal, first of mortal men, thou hast taught this arm of death! Though Erin's fons have fied fhall we not fight the foe? Carril, fon of other times, carry my friends to that bufhy hill. Here, K 4 Connal.

Connal, let us fland, like rocks, and fave our flying friends."

Connal mounts the car of gems. They ftretch their fhields, like the darkened moon, the daughter of the ftarry fkies, when fhe moves, a duncircle, thro' heaven; and dreadful change is expected by men. Sithfadda panted up the hill, and Sronnal haughty fteed. Like waves behind a whale behind them rushed the foe. Now on the rising side of Cromla stood Erin's few sad sons; like a grove through which the stame had rushed hurried on by the winds of the stormy night; distant, withered, dark they stand, with not a leaf to shake in the gale.

Cuthullin ftood beside an oak. He rolled his red eve in filence, and heard the wind in his bushy hair: the scout of ocean came, Moran the son of Fithil. "The fhips," he cried, "the fhips of the lonely isles. Fingal comes the first of men, the breaker of the shields! The waves foam before his black prows! His masts with fails are like groves in clouds!" "Blow," faid Cuthullin, blow ye winds that rufh along my ifle of mift. Come to the death of thousands, O king of refounding Selma! Thy fails, my friend, are to me the clouds of the morning; thy ships the light of heaven; and thou thyfelf a pillar of fire that beams on the world by night. O Connal, first of men, how pleasing, in grief, are our friends! But the night is gathering around! Where now are the ships of Fingal? Here let us pafs the hours of darkness; here wish for the moon of heaven."

The winds come down on the woods. The torrents rufh from the rocks. Rain gathers round the head of Cromla. The red stars tremble between the flying clouds. Sad, by the side of a ftream whose sound is echoed by a tree, sad by the side of a stream the chief of Erin sits. Monnal son of Colgar is there, and Carril of other times. "Unhappy is the hand of Cuthullin," faid the son of Semo, "unhappy is the hand of Cuthullin since he slew his friend! Ferda, son of Damman, I loved thee as myself!"

of

"How, Cuthullin, fon Semo! how fell the breaker of the shields? Well I remember," faid Connal, "the son of the noble Damman. Tall and fair he was like the rain-bow of heaven." Ferda from Albion came, the chief of a hundred hills. In Muri's * hall he learned the fword, and won the friendship of Cuthullin. We moved to the chacetogether: one was our bed in the heath!

Deugala was the fpouse of Cairbar, chief of the plains of Ullin. She was covered with the light of beauty, but her heart was the house of pride. She loved that fun-beam of youth, the son of noble Damman. "Cairbar," faid the white-armed Deugala, "give me half of the herd. No more I will remain in your halls. Divide the herd, dark Cairbar!" "Let Cuthullin," said Cairbar, "divide my herd on the hill. His breast is the seat of justice. Depart, thou light of beauty!" I went and divided the herd. One snow-white bull remained. It gave that bull to Cairbar. The wrath of Deugala.rose!

"Son of Damman," begun the fair, "Cuthullin hath pained my foul. I must hear of his death, or Lubar's stream shall roll over me. My pale ghost shall wander near thee, and mourn the wound of my pride. Pour out the blood of Cuthullin or pierce this heaving breast." "Deugala," faid the fair-haired youth, "how shall I slay the son of Semo? He is the friend of my K 5 fecret thoughts. Shall I then lift the fword?" She wept three days before the chief, on the fourth he faid he would fight. "I will fight my friend, Deugala! but may I fall by his fword! Could I wander on the hill alone? Could I behold the grave of Cuthullin?" We fought on the plain of Muri. Our fwords avoid a wound. They flide on the helmets of fteel; or found on the flippery fhields. Deugala was near with a finile, and faid to the fon of Damman: "Thine arm is feeble, fun-beam of youth! Thy years are not ftrong for fteel. Yield to the fon of Semo. He is a rock on Malmor."

The tear is in the eye of youth. He faultering faid to me: "Cuthullin, raife thy boffy shield. Defend thee from the hand of thy friend. My foul is laden with grief: for I must slay the chief of men!" I sighed as the wind in the cleft of a rock. I lifted high the edge of my steel. The sun-beam of battle fell: the first of Cuthullin's friends! Unhappy is the hand of Cuthullin's friends!

fince the hero fell!

"Mournful is thy tale, fon of the car," faid Carril of other times. "It fends my foul back to the ages of eld, to the days of other years. Often have I heard of Comal, who flew the friend he loved; vet victory attended his freel: the bat-le was confumed in his presence!"

Comal was a fon of Albion; the chief of an hundred hills! His deer drunk of a thoufand freams. A thoufand rocks replied to the voice of his dogs. His face was the mildness of youth. His hand the death of heroes. One was his love, and fair was she! the daughter of mighty Conloch. She appeared like a fun-beam among women. Her hair was the wing of the raven. Her dogs were taught to the chace. Her bow-string founded founded on the winds. Her foul was fixed on Comal. Often met their eyes of love. Their course in the chace was one. Happy were their words in secret. But Grumal loved the maid, the dark chief of the gloomy Ardven. He watched her lone steps in the heath; the soe of unhappy Comal!

One day, tired of the chace, when the mift had concealed their friends, Comal and the daugleter of Conloch met, in the cave of Ronan. It was the wonted haunt of Comal. Its fides were theng with his arms. A hundred thields of thongs were there; a hundred helms of founding freel. "Reft here," he faid, "my love Galbina: thou light of the cave of Ronan! a deer appears on Mora's brow. I go; but I will foon return." "I fear," fhe faid, "dark Grumal my foe: he haunts the cave of Ronan! I will reft among the arms; but foon return, my love."

He went to the deer of Mora. The daughter of Conloch would try his love. She cloathed her fair fides with his armour; the ftrode from the cave of Ronan! He thought it was his foe. H.s. heart beat high. His colour changed, and darkness dimmed his eyes. He drew the bow. The arrow flew. Galbina fell in blood! He run with wildness in his fteps: he called the daughter of Conloch. No answer in the lonely rock. Where art thou, O my love? He faw, at length, her heaving heart, beating around the arrow he threw. "O Conloch's daughter, is it thou? He fank upon her breast! The hunters found the hapless pair: he afterwards walked the hill. But many and filent were his steps round the dark dwelling of his love. The fleet of the ocean came. He fought, the strangers fled. He searched for death along the field. But who could flay the mighty Comal! He threw away his dark brown fhield. An arrow found his manly breaft. He fleeps with his loved Galbina at the noise of the founding furge! Their green tombs are seen by the mariner, when he bounds on the waves of the north.

death

F I N G A L:

AN ANCIENT

E P I C P O E M.

BOOKIII

ARGUMENT to BOOK III.

Cuthullin, pleafed with the flory of Carril, infifts with that bard for more of his fongs. He relates the actions of Fingal in Lochlin, and death of Agandecca the beautiful fifter of Swaran. He had fcarce finished when Calmar the fon of Matha, who had advifed the first battle, came wounded from the field, and told them of Swaran's defign to furprize the remains of the Irish army. He himself proposes to withfrand fingly the whole force of the enemy, in a narrow pafs, till the Irish should make good their retreat. Cuthullin, touched with the gallant propofal of Calmar, refolves to accompany him, and orders Carril to carry off the few that remained of the Irish. Morning comes, Calmar dies of his wounds; and, the ships of the Caledonians appearing, Swaran gives over the purfuit of the Irifh, and returns to oppose Fingal's landing. Cuthullin ashamed, after his defeat, to appear before Fingal, retires to the cave of Tura. Fingal engages the enemy, puts them to flight; but the coming on of night makes the victory not decifive. The king who had observed the gallant behaviour of his grandfon Ofcar, gives him advices concerning his conduct in peace and war. He recommends to him to place the example of his fathers before his eyes, as the best model for his conduct : which introduces the epifode concerning Fainafollis, the daughter of the king of Craca, whom Fingal had taken under his protection, in his youth. Fillan and Ofcar are dispatched to observe the motions of the enemy by night; Gaul the fon of Morni defires the command of the army, in the next battle; which Fingal promifes to give him. Some general reflections of the poet close the third day.

F I N G A L:

AN ANCIENT

EPICPOEM.

IN SIX BOOKS.

BOOK III *.

"P LEASANT are the words of the fong," faid Cuthullin! "lovely the tales of other times! They are, like the calm dew of the morning on the hill of roes; when the fun is faint on its lide, and the lake is fettled and blue in the vale. O Carril, raife again thy voice! let me hear the fong of Selma: which was fung in my halls of joy, when Fingal king of fhields was there, and glow ed at the deeds of his fathers."

"Fingal! thou dweller of battle," faid Carril, "early were thy deeds in arms. Lochlin was confumed in thy wrath, when thy youth strove with the beauty of maids. They smiled at the fair-blooming face of the hero; but death was in his hands. "He was strong as the waters of Lora. His followers were the roar of a thousand streams. They took the king of Lochlin in war; they restored him to his ships. His big heart swelled with pride; the death of the youth was dark in his foul. For none ever, but Fingal, had overcome the strength of the mighty Starno*. He fat in the hall of his shells in Lochlin's woody land. He called the grey-haired Snivan, that often fung round the circle + of Loda: when the stone of power heard his voice, and battle turned in the field of the valiant !"

^{*} The fecond night, fince the opening of the poem, continues; and Cuthullin, Connal, and Carril fill fit in the place described in the preceding book. The flory of Agandeca is introduced here with propriety, as great use is made of it in the course of the poem, and as it, in some measure, brings about the catastrophe.

"Go; grey-haired Snivan," Starno faid, "go to Ardven's fea-furrounded rocks. Tell to the king of Selma; he the fairest among his thoufands, tell him I give him my daughter, the lovelieft maid that ever heaved a breast of snow. Her arms are white as the foam of my waves. Her foul is generous and mild. Let him come with his bravest heroes, to the daughter of the fecret hall !" Snivan came to Selma's hall: Fairhaired Fingal attended his fteps. His kindled foul flew to the maid, as he bounded on the waves of " Welcome," faid the dark-brown the north. Starno, " welcome, king of rocky Morven : welcome his heroes of might, fons of the diftant ifle ! Three days within my halls shall ve feast; three days purfue my boars; that your fame may reach the maid who dwells in the fecret hall."

Starno defigned their death. He gave the: feaft of shells. Fingal who doubted the foe, kept on his arms of fteel. The fons of death were afraid: They fled from the eyes of the king. The voice of sprightly mirth arose. The trembling harps of joy were strung. Bards sung the battle of heroes: They fung the heaving breaft of love.

+ This paffage most certainly alludes to the religion of Lochlin, and the fione of power here mentioned is the image of one of the deities of Scandinavia.

^{*} Starno was the father of Swaran as well as Agandecca. His fierce and eruel character is well marked in other poems concerning the times.

Ullin, Fingal's bard, was there: the fweet voice of refounding Cona. He praifed the daughter of Lochlin; and Morven's * high-defcended chief. The daughter of Lochlin overheard. She left the hall of her feeret figh! She came in all her beauty, like the moon from the cloud of the east. Lovelines was around her as light. Her steps were the music of songs. She saw the youth and loved him. He was the stolen sigh of her soul. Her blue eye rolled on him in secret: she blest the chief of refounding Morven.

The third day with all its beams, shone bright on the wood of boars. Forth moved the darkbrowed Starno; and Fingal, king of shields. Half the day they spent in the chace; the spear of Selma was red in blood. It was then the daughter of Starno, with blue eyes rolling in tears; it was then she came with her voice of love, and spoke to the king of Morven. "Fingal, high descended chief, trust not Starno's heart of pride. Within that wood he has placed his chiefs. Beware of the wood of death. But, remember, son of the isle, remember Agandecca: fave me from the wrath of my father, king of the windy Morven!"

The youth, with unconcern, went on; his heroes by his fide. The fons of death fell by his hand; and Gormal echoed around! Before the halls of Starno the fons of the chace convened. The king's dark brows were like clouds. His eyes like meteors of night. "Bring hither," he faid, "Agandecca to her lovely king of Morven! His hand is ftained with the blood of my people; her words have not been in vain!" She came with the red eye of tears. She came with loofely flowling locks. Her white breast heaved with broken sighs, like the foam of the streamy Lubar. Starno pierced her side with steel. She fell, like a wreath of snow, which slides from the rocks of Roman; when the woods are still, and echo deepens in the vale! Then Fingal eyed his valiant chiefs, his valiant chiefs took arms. The gloom of battle roared; Lochlin sled or died. Pale, in his bounding ship he closed the maid of the fostest foul. Her tomb ascends on Ardven; the sea roars round her narrow dwelling.

^{*} All the North-west coast of Scotland probably went of old under the name of Morven, which signifies a ridge of very high hills.

"Bleffed be her foul," faid Cuthullin; bleffed be the mouth of the fong! Strong was the youth of Fingal; ftrong is his arm of age. Lochlin shall fall again before the king of echoing Morven. Shew thy face from a cloud, O moon! light his white fails on the wave: And if any strong spirit * of heaven sits on that low-hung cloud; turn his dark ships from the rock, thou rider of the ftorm !"

Such were the words of Curhullin at the found of the mountain-stream; when Calmar ascended the hill, the wounded fon of Matha. From the field he came in his blood. He leaned on his bending spear. Feeble is the arm of battle! but strong the foul of the hero! "Welcome! O' fon of Matha," said Connal, "Welcome art thou to thy friends! Why bursts that broken sight, from the breast of him who never feared before?"

"And never, Connal, will he fear, chief of the pointed

This is the only paffage in the poem that has the appearance of religion. But: Cuthullin's apoltrophe to this fpirit is accompanied with a doubt, fo that it is not eafy to determine whether the hero meant a fuperior being, or the ghofts of deceafed warriers, who were fupposed in those times to role the florm, and to transport themselves in a gust of wind from one country to another.

pointed fteel! My foul brightens in danger: in the noise of arms. I am of the race of battle.

My fathers never feared.

"Cormar was the first of my race. He fported through the ftorms of waves. His black skiff bounded on ocean; he travelled on the wings of the wind. A spirit once embroiled the night. Seas fwell, and rocks refound. Winds drive along the clouds. The lightning flies on wings of fire. He feared, and came to land; then blushed that he feared at all. He rushed again among the waves to find the fon of the wind. Three youths guide the bounding. bark; he frood with fword unsheathed. When the low-hung vapour paffed, he took it by the curling head. He fearched its dark womb with his fteel. The fon of the wind forfook the air. The moon and ftars returned! Such was the boldness of my race. Calmar is like his fathers. Danger flies from the lifted fword. They beft fucceed who dare!

"But now, ye fons of green Erin, retire from Lena's bloody heath. Collect the fad remnant of our friends, and join the fword of Fingal. I heard the found of Lochlin's advancing arms! Calmar will remain and fight. My voice shall be such, my friends, as if thousands were behind me. But, son of Semo, remember me. Remember Calmar's lifetest corfe. When Fingal shall have wasted the field, place me by some stone of remembrance, that future times may hear my same; that the mother of Calmar may rejoice in my renown."

"No: fon of Matha," faid Cuthullin, "I will never leave thee here. My joy is in unequal fight: my foul increases in danger. Connal, and Carri of other times, carry off the sad sons of Erin. When the battle is over, fearth for us in this narrow way. For near this oak we shall fall, in the stream of the battle of thousands?" O Fithil's son, with slying speed rush over the heath of Lena. Tell to Fingal that Erin is fallen. Bid the king of Morven come. O let him come, like the sun in a storm, to lighten, to restore the isle!"

Morning is grey on Cromia. The fons of the fea afcend. Calmar ftood forth to meet them in the pride of his kindling foul. But pale was the face of the chief. He leaned on his father's fpear. That fpear which he brought from Lara, when the foul of his mother was fad 5 the foul of the lonely Alcketha, waining in the forrow of years. But flowly now the hero falls, like a tree on the plain. Dark Cuthullin ftands alone like a rock in a fandy vale. The fea comes with its waves, and roars on its hardened fides. Its head is covered with foam; the hills are echoing around.

Now from the grey mist of the ocean, the white-sailed ships of Fingal appear. High is the grove of their masts, as they nod, by turns, on the rolling wave. Swaran saw them from the hill. He returned from the sons of Erin. As ebbs the resounding sea, through the hundred isles of Inistore; so loud, so vast, so immense returned the sons of Lochlin against the king. But bending, weeping, sad, and slow, and dragging his long spear behind, Cuthullin funk in Cromla's wood, and mourned his fallen friends. He feared the face of Fingal, who was wont to greet him from the fields of renown!

"How many lie there of my heroes! the chiefs of Erin's race! they that were cheerful the in hall, when the found of the shells arose!

No more shall I find their steps in the heath. No more shall I hear their voice in the chace. Pale, silent, low on bloody beds, are they who were my friends! O spirits of the lately dead, meet Cuthullin on his heath! Speak to him on the wind, when the rustling tree of Tura's cave resounds. There, far remote, I shall lie unknown. No bard shall hear of me. No grey stone shall rise to my renown. Mourn me with the dead, O Bragela! departed is my same." Such were the words of Cuthullin, when he sunk in the woods of Cromla!

Fingal, tall in his ship, stretched his bright lance before him. Terrible was the gleam of the steel: it was like the green meteor of death, setting in the heath of Malmor, when the traveller is alone, and the broad moon is darkened in heaven.

"The battle is past," faid the king. "I behold the blood of my friends. Sad is the heath of Lena! mournful the oaks of Cromla! The hunters have fallen in their strength: the son of Semo is no more. Ryno and Fillan, my sons, sound the horn of Fingal. Ascend that hill on the shore; call the children of the soe. Call them from the grave of Lamdarg, the chief of other times. Be your voice like that of your father, when he enters the battles of his strength. I wait for the mighty stranger. I wait on Lena's shore for Swaran. Let him come with all his race; strong in battle are the friends of the dead!"

Fair Ryno as lightning gleamed along: Dark Fillan rushed like the shade of autumn. On Lena's heath their voice is heard. The sons of ocean heard the horn of Fingal. As the roaring eddy of ocean returning from the kingdom of fnows; fo ftrong, fo dark, fo fudden came down the fons of Lochlin. The king in their front appears, in the difinal pride of his tarms! Wrath burns on his dark-brown face; his eyes roll in the fire of his valour. Fingal beheld the fon of Starno: he remembered Agandecca. For Swaran with the tears of youth had mourned his white-bosomed fifter. He fent Ullin of fongs to bid him to the feast of shells: For pleasant on Fingal's foul returned the memory of the first of his loves!

Ullin came with aged fteps, and fpoke to Starno's fon. "O thou that dwelleft afar; furrounded, like a rock, with thy waves! come to the feaft of the king, and pass the day in rest. To-morrow let us fight, O Swaran, and break the echoing shields." "To-day," said Starno's wrathful son, "we break the echoing shields: to-morrow my feaft shall be spread; but Fingal shall lie on earth." "To-morrow let his feaft shall be spread," said Fingal with a smile. "To-day, O my sons! we shall break the echoing shields. Offian, stand thou near my arm. Gaul, sift thy terrible sword. Fergus, bend thy crooked yew. Throw, Fillan, thy lance through heaven. Lift your shields, like the darkened moon. Be your spears the meteors of death. Follow me in the path of my fame. Equal my deeds in battle."

As a hundred winds on Morven; as the streams of a hundred hills; as clouds fly successive over heaven; as the dark ocean assails the shore of the defart: so roaring, so vast, so terrible the armies mixed on Lena's echoing heath. The groan of the people spread over the hills: it was like the thunder of night, when the clouds bursts on Cona; and a thousand ghosts shriek at once on the hollow wind. Fingal rushed on in his

ftrength

ftrength, terrible as the spirit of Trenmor; when, in a whirlwind, he comes to Morven, to see the children of his pride. The oaks resound on their mountains, and the rocks fall down before him. Dimly seen, as lightens the night, he ftrides largely from hill to hill. Bloody was the hand of my father, when he whirled the gleam of his sword. He remembers the battles of his youth. The field is wasted in his course!

Ryno went on like a pillar of fire. Dark is the brow of Gaul. Fergus rufhed forward with feet of wind. Fillan like the mift of the hill. Offian, like a rock, came down. I exulted in the ftrength of the king. Many were the deaths of my arm! difinal the gleam of my fword! My locks were not then fo grey; nor trembled my hands with age. My eyes were not closed in darkness; my feet failed not in the race!

Who can relate the deaths of the people? Who the deeds of mighty heroes? when Fingal burning in his wrath, confumed the fons of Lochlin? groans fwelled on groans from hill to hill, till night had covered all. Pale, staring like a herd of deer, the fons of Lochlin convene on Lena. We fat and heard the fprightly harp, at Lubar's gentle stream. Fingal himself was next to the foe. He listened to the tales of his bards. His godlike race were in the fong, the chiefs of other times. Attentive, leaning on his fhield, the king of Morven fat. The wind whiftled through his locks; his thoughts are of the days of other years. Near him on his bending spear, my young, my valiant Oscar stood. He admired the king of Morven: his deeds were fwelling in his foul!

"Son of my fon," begun the king, "O Ofcar, pride of youth! I faw the shining of thy sword. I gloried in my race. Pursue the same of our fathers; be thou what they have been, and Trathal the father of heroes! They fought the battle in their youth. They are the song of bards. O Ofcar! bend the strong in arm: but spare the feeble hand. Be thou a stream of many tides against the foes of thy people; but like the gale, that moves the grass, to those who ask thine aid. So Trenmor lived; such Trathal was; and such has Fingal been. My arm was the support of the injured; the weak rested behind the lightning of my steel.

"Ofcar! I was young like thee, when lovely Fainafollis came: that fun-beam! that mild light of love! the daughter of * Craca's king! I then returned from Cona's heath, and few were in my train. A white-failed boat appeared far off; we faw it like a mift, that rode on ocean's wind. It foon approached. We faw the fair. Her white breaft heaved with fighs. The wind was in her loofe dark hair: her rofy cheek had tears. "Daughter of beauty," calm I faid, " what figh is in thy breaft? Can I, young as I am, defend thee, daughter of the fea? My fword is not unmatched in war, but dauntless is my heart."

"To thee I fly," with fighs she said, "O prince of mighty men! To thee I fly, chief of the generous shells, supporter of the feeble hand! The king of Craca's echoing is owned me the sunbeam of his race. Cromala's hills have heard

* What the Craca here mentioned was, is not, at this diftance of time, eafy to determine. The most probable opinion is, that it was one of the Shetland isles. There is a story concerning a daughter of the king of Craca in the fixth book. the fighs of love for unhappy Fainafollis! Sora's chief beheld me fair; he loved the daughter of Craca. His fword is a beam of light upon the warrior's fide. But dark is his brow; and tempefts are in his foul. I fhun him, on the roaring fea; but Sora's chief purfues."

"Reft thou," I faid, "behind my shield;

"Rest thou," I said, "behind my shield; rest in peace, thou beam of light! The gloomy chief of Sora will sly, if Fingal's arm is like his soul. In some lone cave I might conceal thee, daughter of the sea! But Fingal never slies. Where the danger threatens, I rejoice in the storm of spears." I saw the tears upon her cheek. I pitied Craca's fair. Now, like a dreadful wave afar, appeared the ship of stormy Borbar. His masts high-bended over the sea behind their sheets of snow. White roll the waters on either side. The strength of ocean sounds. "Come thou," I said, "from the roar of ocean, thou rider of the storm! Partake the feast within my hall. It is the house of strangers."

The maid ftood trembling by my fide. He drew the bow. She fell. "Unerring is thy hand," I faid, "but feeble was the foe!" We fought, nor weak the ftrife of death! He funk beneath my fword. We laid them in two tombs of ftone; the haples lovers of youth! Such have I been in my youth, O Ofcar! be thou like the age of Fingal. Never fearch thou for battle; nor shun it when it comes.

"Fillan and Ofcar of the dark-brown hair! ye, that are fwift in the race! fly over the heath in my presence. View the sons of Lochlin. Far off I hear the noise of their feet, like distant founds in woods. Go: that they may not fly from my fword, along the waves of the north. For many chiefs of Erin's race lie here on the dark Vol. I. bed bed of death. The children of war are low; the fons of echoing Cromla."

The heroes flew like two dark clouds: two dark clouds that are the chariots of ghosts; when air's dark children come forth to frighten hapless men. It was then that Gaul *, the fon of Morni, stood like a rock in night. His spear is glittering to the stars; his voice like many streams.

" Son of battle," cried the chief, "O Fingal, king of shells! let the bards of many fongs footh Erin's friends to reft. Fingal, fheath thou thy fword of death; and let thy people fight. We wither away without our fame; our king is the only breaker of shields! When morning rifes on our hills, behold, at a distance, our deeds. Let Lochlin feel the fword of Morni's fon; that bards may fing of me. Such was the custom heretofore of Fingal's noble race. Such was thine own, thou king of fwords, in battles of the fpear."

"O Son of Morni," Fingal replied, "I glory in thy fame. Fight; but my fpear shall be near, to aid thee in the midst of danger. Raife, raife the voice, ye fons of fong! and lull me into reft. Here will Fingal lie, amidft the wind of night. And if thou, Agandecca, art near, among the children of thy land; if thou fittest on a blast of wind, among the high-shrowded masts of Lochlin! come to my dreams +, my fair one. Shew thy bright face to my foul."

Many

+ The poet prepares us for the dream of Fingal in the next book.

^{*} Gaul, the fon of Morni, was chief of a tribe that difputed long the pre-eminence with Fingal himfelf. They were reduced at last to obedience, and Gaul, from an enemy, turned Fingal's best friend and greatest hero. His character is formething like that of Ajax in the Iliad; a hero of more ftrength than conduct in battle. He was very fond of military fame, and here he demands the next battle to himfelf. The poet, by an artifice, removes Fingal, that his return may be the more magnificent.

Many a voice and many a harp, in tuneful founds arofe. Of Fingal's noble deeds they fung; of Fingal's noble race: And fometimes, on the lovely found, was heard the name of Offian. I often fought, and often won, in battles of the spear. But blind, and tearful, and forlorn I walk with little men! O Fingal, with thy race of war, I now behold thee not! The wild roes feed on the green tomb of the mighty king of Morven! Bleft be thy foul, thou king of fwords, thou most renowned on the hills of Cona!

F I N G A L:

AN ANCIENT

E P I C P O E M.

BOOK IV.

ARGUMENT to BOOK IV.

The action of the poem being suspended by night, Offian takes that opportunity to relate his own actions at the lake of Lego, and his courtship of Evirallin, who was the mother of Ofcar, and had died fome time before the expedition of Fingal into Ireland. Her ghost appears to him, and tells him that Ofcar, who had been fent, the beginning of the night, to observe the enemy, was engaged with an advanced party and almost overpowered. Offian relieves his fon; and an alarm is given to Fingal of the approach of Swaran. The king rifes, calls his army together, and, as he had promifed the preceding night, devolves the command on Gaul the fon of Morni, while he himfelf, after charging his fons to behave gallantly and defend his people, retires to a hill, from whence he could have a view of the battle. The battle joins; the poet relates Ofcar's great actions. But when Ofcar, in conjunction with his father conquered in one wing, Gaul, who was attacked by Swaran in perfon, was on the point of retreating in the other. Fingal fends Ullin his bard to encourage him with a war fong, but notwithstanding Swaran prevails; and Gaul and his army are obliged to give way. Fingal, defcending from the hill, rallies them again: Swaran defists from the pursuit, possesses himself of a rifing ground, restores the ranks, and waits the approach of Fingal. The king, having encouraged his men, gives the necessary orders, and renews the battle. Cuthullin, who, with his friend Connal, and Carril his bard, had retired to the cave of Tura, hearing the noise, came to the brow of the hill, which overlooked the field of battle, where he faw Fingal engaged with the enemy. He, being hindered by Connal from joining Fingal, who was himfelf upon the point of obtaining a complete victory, fends Carril to congratulate that hero on his fuccefs.

F I N G A L:

AN ANCIENT

E P I C P O E M.

IN SIX BOOKS.

BOOK IV*.

WHO comes with her fongs from the hill, like the bow of the showery Lena? It is the maid of the voice of love! The white-armed daughter of Toscar! Often hast thou heard my song; often given the tear of beauty. Dost thou come to the wars of thy people? to hear the actions of Oscar? When shall I cease to mourn, by the streams of resounding Cona? My years have passed away in battle. My age is darkened with grief!

L 4 " Daughter

^{*} Fingal being afleep, and the action furpended by night, the poet introduces the ftory of his courtship of Evirallin the daughter of Branno. The epifode is necessary to clear up several passages that follow in the poem; at the same time that in naturally brings on the action of the book, which may be supposed to begin about the middle of the third night from the opening of the poem. This book, as many of Ossian's other compositions, is addressed to the seautiful Malvina the daughter of Toscar. She appears to have been in love with Oscar, and to have affected the company of the father after the death of the son.

" Daughter of the hand of fnow! I was not fo mournful and blind. I was not fo dark and forlorn, when Evirallin loved me! Evirallin with the dark-brown hair, the white-bosomed daughter of Branno! A thousand heroes sought the maid, she refused her love to a thousand. The fons of the fword were despised: for graceful in her eyes was Offian! I went, in fuit of the maid, to Lego's fable furge. Twelve of my people were there, the fons of streamy Morven! We came to Branno, friend of ftrangers! Branno of the founding mail! " From whence," he faid, " are the arms of steel? Not easy to win is the maid, who has denied the blue-eyed fons of Erin! But bleft be thou, O fon of Fingal! Happy is the maid that waits thee! Tho' twelve daughters of beauty were mine, thine were the choice, thou fon of fame !"

He opened the hall of the maid, the darkhaired Evirallin. Joy kindled in our manly breasts. We blest the maid of Branno. " Above us on the hill appeared the people of stately Cormac. Eight were the heroes of the chief. 'The heath flamed wide with their arms. Colla; there Durra of wounds, there mighty Tofcar, and Tago, there Frestal the victorious flood; Dairo of the happy deeds: Dala the battle's bulwark in the narrow way! The fword flamed in the hand of Cormac. Graceful was the look of the hero! Eight were the heroes of Offian. Ullin flormy fon of war. Mullo of the generous deeds. The noble, the graceful Scelacha. Oglan, and Cerdal the wrathful. Dumariccan's brows of death! And why should Ogar be the laft; fo wide renowned on the hills of Ardven?"

"Ogar met Dala the strong, face to face, on the field of heroes. The battle of the chiefs was like wind, on ocean's foamy waves. The dagger is remembered by Ogar; the weapon which he loved. Nine times he drowned it in Dala's side. The stormy battle turned. Three times I broke on Cormac's shield: three times he broke his spear. But, unhappy youth of love! I cut his head away. Five times I shook it by the lock. The friends of Cormac sled. Wheever would have told me, lovely maid, when then I strove in battle; that blind, forsaken, and forlorn I now should pass the night; firm ought his mail to have been; unmatched his arm in war!"

On * Lena's gloomy heath, the voice of music died away. The unconstant blast blew hard. The high oak shook its leaves around. Of Evirallin were my thoughts, when in all the light of beauty she came. Her blue eyes rolling in tears. She stood on a cloud before my sight, and spoke with seeble voice! "Rife, Oslian, rife, and save my son; save Oscar prince of men. Near the red oak of Luba's stream, he sights with Lochlin's sons." She sunk into her cloud again. I covered me with steel. My spear supported my steps; my rattling armour rung. I hummed, as I was wont in danger, the songs of heroes of old. Like distant thunder Lochlin heard. They sled; my son pursued."

"I called him like a diftant stream. Ofcar return over Lena. "No further pursue the foe," I faid, "though Offian is behind thee." He L 5

^{*} The poet returns to his fubject. If one could fix the time of the year in which the action of the poem happened, from the feene deferibed here, I flould be tempted to place it in autumn. The trees fleed their leaves, and the winds are variable, both which circumstances agree with that scason of the year.

came; and pleasant to my ear was Oscar's sounding steel. "Why didst thou stop my hand," he faid, "till death had covered all? For dark and dreadful by the stream they met thy son and Fillan! They watched the terrors of the night. Our swords have conquered some. But as the winds of night pour the ocean over the white sands of Mora, so dark advance the sons of Lochlin, over Lena's rustling heath! The ghosts of night shrick afar: I have seen the meteors of death. Let me awake the king of Morven, he that siniles in danger! He that is like the sun of heaven, rising in a storm!"

Fingal had started from a dream, and leaned on Trenmor's shield; the dark-brown shield of his fathers; which they had lifted of old in war. The hero had feen, in his rest, the mournful form of Agandecca. She came from the way of the ocean. She flowly, lonely, moved over Lena. Her face was pale like the mift of Cromla. Dark were the tears of her cheek. She often raifed her dim hand from her robe: her robe which was of the clouds of the defart: she raised her dim hand over Fingal, and turned away her filent eyes! " Why weeps the daughter of Starno?" faid Fingal, with a figh; "why is thy face fo pale, fair wanderer of the clouds?" She departed on the wind of Lena. She left him in the midst of the night. She mourned the fons of her people, that were to fall by the hand of Fingal.

The hero frarted from reft. Still he beheld her in his foul. The found of Ofcar's fteps approached. The king faw the grey shield on his side: For the faint beam of the morning came over the waters of Ullin. "What do the foes in their fear?" faid the riting king of Morven;

" or fly they through ocean's foam, or wait they the battle of steel? But why should Fingal ask? I hear their voice on the early wind! Fly over Lena's heath: O Oscar, awake our friends!"

The king ftood by the ftone of Lubar. Thrice he reared his terrible voice. The deer ftarted from the fountains of Cromla. The rocks fhook on all their hills. Like the noife of a hundred mountain-ftreams, that burft, and roar, and foam! like the clouds, that gather to a tempeft on the blue face of the fky! fo met the fons of the defart, round the terrible voice of Fingal. Pleafant was the voice of the king of Morven to the warriors of his land. Often had he led them to battle; often returned with the fpoils of the foe!

" Come to battle," faid the king, " ye children of echoing Selma! Come to the death of thousands. Comhal's fon will see the fight. My fword shall wave on the hill the defence of my people in war. But never may you need it, war-riors: while the fon of Morni fights, the chief of mighty men ! He shall lead my battle; that his fame may rife in fong! O ye ghofts of heroes dead! ye riders of the ftorm of Cromla! receive my falling people with joy, and bear them to your hills. And may the blaft of Lena carry them over my feas, that they may come to my filent dreams, and delight my foul in reft! Fitlan and Ofcar, of the dark-brown hair! fair Ryno, with the pointed fteel! advance with valour to the fight. Behold the fon of Morni! Let your fwords be like his in strife: behold the deeds of his hands. Protect the friends of your father. Remember the chiefs of old. My children, I will fee you yet, though here ye should fall in Erin. Soon shall our cold, pale ghosts meet in a cloud on Cona's eddying winds!"

Now

Now like a dark and flormy cloud, edgeround with the red lightning of heaven; flying westward from the morning's beam, the king of Selma removed. Terrible is the light of his armour; two spears are in his hand. His grey hair falls on the wind. He often looks back on the war. Three bards attend the son of fame, to bear his words to the chiefs. High on Cromla's side he sat, waving the lightning of his sword, and as he waved we moved.

Joy rifes in Ofcar's face. His cheek is red. His eye sheds tears. The sword is a beam of fire in his hand. He came, and finiling, fpoke to Offian. " O ruler of the fight of fteel! my father, hear thy fon! Retire with Morven's mighty chief. Give me the fame of Offian. If here I fall: O chief, remember that breaft of fnow, the lonely fun-beam of my love, the white-handed daughter of Tofcar! For, with red cheek from the rock, bending over the stream, her foft hair flies about her bosom, as she pours the figh for Ofcar. Tell her I am on my hills, a lightlybounding fon of the wind; tell her, that in a cloud, I may meet the lovely maid of Tofcar." "Raife, Ofcar, rather raife my tomb. I will not yield the war to thee. The first and bloodiest in the strife, my arm shall teach thee how to fight. But, remember, my fon, to place this fword, this bow, the horn of my deer, within that dark and narrow house, whose mark is one grey stone! Ofcar, I have no love to leave to the care of my fon. Evirallin is no more, the lovely daughter of Branno!"

Such were our words, when Gaul's loud voice came growing on the wind. He waved on high the fword of his father. We rushed to death and wounds. As waves, white-bubbling over the deep, come fwelling, roaring on; as rocks of ooze meet roaring waves: fo foes attacked and fought. Man met with man, and fteel with fteel. Shields found, and warriors fall. As a hundred hammers on the red fon of the furnace, fo rose, fo rung their fwords!

Gaul rushed on, like a whirlwind in Ardven. The destruction of heroes is on his sword. Swaran was like the fire of the desart in the echoing heath of Gormal! How can I give to the song the death of many spears? My sword rose high, and stamed in the strife of blood. Oscar, terrible wert thou, my best, my greatest son! I rejoice in my secret soul, when his sword slamed over the slain. They sled amain through Lena's heath. We pursued and slew. As stones that bound from rock to rock; as axes in echoing woods; as thunder rolls from hill to hill, in dismal broken peals; so blow succeeded to blow, and death to death, from the hand of Oscar and mine.

But Swaran closed round Morni's fon, as the firength of the tide of Inistore. The king half-rose from his hill at the fight. He half-assumed the spear. "Go, Ullin, go, my aged bard," begun the king of Morven. "Remind the mighty Gaul of war. Remind him of his fathers. Support the yielding fight with song; for song enlivens war." Tall Ullin went, with step of age, and spoke to the king of swords. "Son * of the chief of generous steeds! high bounding king of spears. Strong arm in every perilous perilous toil. Hard heart that never yields. Chief of the pointed arms of death. Cut down the foe; let no white fail bound round dark Iniftore. Be thine arm like thunder, thine eyes like fire, thy heart of folid rock. Whirl round thy fword as a meteor at night; lift thy fhield like the flame of death. Son of the chief of generous fleeds, cut down the foe. Deftroy! The hero's heart beat high. But Swaran came with battle. He cleft the fhield of Gaul in twain. The fons of Selma fled.

^{*} The custom of encouraging men in battle with extempore rhymes, has been carried down almost to our own times. Several of these war songs are extant, but the most of them are only a group of epithets, without either beauty or harmony, utterly destitute of poetical merit.

Fingal at once arose in arms. Thrice he reared his dreadful voice. Cromla answered around. The fons of the defart stood still. They bent their blushing faces to earth, ashamed at the prefence of the king. He came, like a cloud of rain in the day of the fun, when flow it rolls on the hill, and fields expect the shower. Silence attends its flow progress aloft; but the tempest is foon to arife. Swaran beheld the terrible king of Morven. He stopped in the midst of his courfe. Dark he leaned on his fpear, rolling his red eyes around. Silent and tall he feemed as an oak on the banks of Lubar, which had its branches blafted of old by the lightning of heaven. It bends over the stream: the grey moss whiftles in the wind: fo ftood the king. Then flowly he retired to the rifing heath of Lena. His thousands poured around the hero. Darkness gathers on the hill!

Fingal, like a beam from heaven, shone in the midst of his people. His heroes gather around him. He sends forth the voice of his power. "Raise my standards on high; spread them on Lena's wind, like the slames of an hundred hills! Let them sound on the winds of Erin, and remind us of the sight. Ye sons of the roaring streams, that pour from a thousand hills, be near the king of Morven! attend to the words of his power! Gaul strongest arm of death! O Oscar, of the future sights! Connal, son of the blue shields of Sora! Dermid of the dark-brown hair! offian king of many fongs, be near your father's arm!" We reared the fun-beam * of battle; the standard of the king! Each beam "of pattie; the standard of the sing! Each hero exulted with joy, as, waving it flew on the wind. It was studded with gold above, as the blue wide shell of the nightly sky. Each hero had his standard too; and each his gloomy men!

the

"Behold," said the king of generous shells, how Lochlin divides on Lena! They stand like broken clouds on a hill; or an half confumed grove of oaks; when we fee the sky through its branches, and the meteor passing behind! Let every chief among the friends of Fingal take a dark troop of those that frown so high: Nor let a son of the echoing groves, bound on the waves of Inistore!"

"Mine," faid Gaul, "be the feven chiefs, that came from Lano's lake." "Let Inistore's dark king," faid Ofcar, "come to the fword of Offian's fon." "To mine the king of Inifcon," faid Connal, " heart of fteel !" " Or Mudan's chief or I," faid brown-haired Dermid, "fhall fleep on clay-cold earth." "My choice, though now fo weak and dark, was Terman's battling king; I promifed with my hand to win the hero's dark-brown shield." "Blest and victorious be my chiefs," faid Fingal of the mildest look. "Swaran, ^{*} Fingal's standard was distinguished by the name of fine-biam; probably on account of its bright colour, and its being studded with gold. To begin a battle is expressed, in old composition, by lifting up the fun-beam.

"Swaran, king of roaring waves, thou art the choice of Fingal!"

Now, like an hundred different winds, that pour through many vales; divided, dark the fons of Selma advanced. Cromla echoed around " How can I relate the deaths, when we closed in the strife of arms! O daughter of Toscar! bloody were our hands! The gloomy ranks of Lochlin fell, like the banks of the roaring Cona! Our arms were victorious on Lena: each chief fulfilled his promise! Beside the nurmur of Branno thou didft often fit, O maid! thy white bosom rose frequent, like the down of the swan when flow the fwims on the lake, and fidelong winds blow on her ruffled wing. Thou hath feen the fon retire, red and flow behind his cloud: night gathering round on the mountain, while the unfrequent blaft roared in the narrow vales. At length the rain beats hard: thunder rolls in peals. Lightning glances on the rocks! Spirits ride on beams of fire! The ftrength of the mountain-streams comes roaring down the hills. Such was the noise of battle, maid of the arms of fnow! Why, daughter of Toscar, why that tear? The maids of Lochlin have cause to weep! The people of their country fell. Bloody were the blue fwords of the race of my heroes! But I am fad, forlorn, and blind: no more the companion of heroes. Give, lovely maid, to me thy tears. I have feen the tombs of all my friends !"

It was then, by Fingal's hand, a hero fell, to his grief! Grey-haired he rolled in the duft. He lifted his faint eyes to the king: " And is it by me thou hast fallen," faid the fon of Comhal, "thou friend of Agandecca! I have feen thy tears for the maid of my love in the halls of the bloody Starno! Thou haft been the foe of the foes of my love, and haft thou fallen by my hand? Raife, Ullin, raife the grave of Mathon, and give his name to Agandecca's fong. Dear to my foul haft thou been, thou darkly-dwelling maid of Ardven!"

Cuthullin, from the cave of Cromla, heard the noise of the troubled war. He called to Connal chief of swords; to Carril of other times. The grey-haired heroes heard his voice. They took their pointed spears. The came, and saw the tide of battle, like ocean's crowded waves: when the dark wind blows from the deep, and rolls the billows through the fandy vale! Cuthullin kindled at the fight. Darkness gathered on his brow. His hand is on the sword of his fathers: his red rolling eyes on the foe. He thrice attempted to ruth to battle. He thrice was stopt by Connal. "Chief of the isle of mist," he faid, "Fingal subdues the foe. Seek not a part of the fame of the king; himself is like the form!"

"Then, Carril, go," replied the chief, "go, greet the king of Morven. When Lochlin falls away like a fiream after rain: when the noife of the battle is paft. Then be thy voice fweet in his ear to praife the king of Selma! Give him the fword of Caithbat. Cuthullin is not worthy to lift the arms of his fathers! Come, O ye gbofts of the lonely Cromla! ye fouls of chiefs that are no more! be near the fteps of Cuthullin; talk to him in the cave of his grief. Never more shall I be renowned, among the mighty in in the land. I am a beam that has shone; a mist that has sled away: when the blast of the morning came, and brightened the shaggy side of the hill: Connal! talk of arms no more: departed is my fame. My sighs shall be on Cromla's wind; till my footsteps cease to be seen. And thou, white-bosom'd Bragela, mourn over the fall of my fame: vanquished, I will never return to thee, thou sun-beam of my foul!"

F I N G A L

AN ANCIENT EPIC POEM.

BOOK v.

ARGUMENT to BOOK V.

Cuthullin and Connal ftill remain on the hill. Fingal and Swaran meet; the combat is described. Swaran is overcome, bound and delivered over as a prisoner to the care of Offian and Gaul the son of Morni; Fingal, his younger sons, and Oscar, still pursue the enemy. The episode of Orla a chief of Lochlin, who was mortally wounded in the battle, is introduced. Fingal, touched with the death of Orla, orders the pursuit to be discontinued; and calling his sons together, he is informed that Ryno, the youngest of them, was slain. He laments his death, hears the story of Lamdarg and Gelclossa, and returns towards the place where he had left Swaran. Carril, who had been sent by Cuthullin to congratulate Fingal on his victory, comes in the mean time to Ossan. The conversation of the two poets closes the action of the fourth day.

L: N G

AN ANCIENT

EPIC POEM:

IN SIX BOOKS.

BOOK V.

ON Cromla's refounding fide, Connal spoke to the chief of the noble car. Why that gloom, fon of Semo? Our friends are the mighty in fight. Renowned art thou, O warrior! many were the deaths of thy steel. Often has Bragela met, with blue-rolling eyes of joy: often has she met her hero, returning in the midst of the valiant; when his fword was red with flaughter; when his foes were filent in the fields of the tomb. Pleafant to her ears were thy bards, when thy deeds arose in song.

But behold the king of Morven! He moves, below, like a pillar of fire. His strength is like the stream of Lubar, or the wind of the echoing Cromla; when the branchy forests of night are torn from all their rocks! Happy are thy people, O Fingal! thine arm shall finish their wars. Thou art the first in their dangers: the wifest in the days of their peace. Thou speakest, and thy thousands obey: armies tremble at the found of thy steel. Happy are thy people, O Fingal! king of resounding Selma! Who is that so dark and terrible coming in the thunder of his course? who but Starno's fon to meet the king of Morven?

ven? Behold the battle of the chiefs! it is the ftorm of the ocean, when two spirits meet far distant, and contend for the rolling of waves. The hunter hears the noise on his hill. He sees the high billows advancing to Ardven's shore! Such were the words of Connal, when the heroes met in fight. There was the clang of arms! there every blow, like the hundred hammers of the furnace! Terrible is the battle of the kings; dreadful the look of their eyes. Their darkbrown shields are cleft in twain. Their steel flies, broken, from their helms. They fling their weapons down. Each rushes to his hero's grasp: Their sinewy arms bend round each other: they turn from fide to fide, and ftrain and stretch their large spreading limbs below. But when the pride of their strength arose, they shook the hill with their heels. Rocks tumble from their places on high; the green-headed bushes are overturned. At length the strength of Swaran fell: the king of the groves is bound. Thus have I feen on Cona; but Cona I behold no more! thus have I feen two dark hills, removed from their place, by the strength of the burfting stream. They turn from fide to fide in their fall; their tall oaks meet one another on high. Then they tumble together with all their rocks and trees. The streams are turned by their fide. The red ruin is feen afar.

"Sons of diftant Morven," faid Fingal: compared the king of Lochlin! He is strong as his thousand waves. His hand is taught to war. His race is of the times of old. Gaul, thou first of my heroes; Offian king of fongs attend. He is the friend of Agandecca; raife to joy his grief. But, Ofcar, Fillan, and Ryno, ye children of the race! pursue Lochlin over Lena; that no vessel may hereafter bound, on the dark-rolling waves of Iniffere!"

They flew fudden across the heath. He flowly moved, like a cloud of thunder, when the fultry plain of fummer is filent and dark! His sword is before him as a fun-beam; terrible as the streaming meteor of night. He came toward a chief of Lochlin. He spoke to the son of the wave. "Who is that so dark and sad, at the rock of the roaring stream? He cannot bound over its course: How stately is the chief! His bossy shield is on his side; his spear, like the ree of the desart! Youth of the dark-red hair, art thou of the soes of Fingal?"

"I am a fon of Lochlin," he cries, "ftrong is my arm in war. My fpouse is weeping at home. Orla shall never return!" "Or sights or yields the hero," said Fingal of the noble deeds? "foes do not conquer in my presence: my friends are renowned in the hall. Son of the wave, follow me, partake the feast of my shells: pursue the deer of my defart: be thou the friend of Fingal." "No:" said the hero, "I affist the feeble. My strength is with the weak in arms. My sword has been always unmatched, O warrior! let the king of Morven yield!" "I never yielded, Orla! Fingal never yielded to man. Draw thy sword and chuse thy foe. Many are my heroes!"

"Does then the king refuse the fight?" said Orla of the dark-brown shield. "Fingal is a match for Orla: and he alone of all his race!" But, king of Morven, if I shall fall; as one time the warrior must die; raise my tomb in the midst: let it be the greatest on Lena. Send, over the dark-blue wave, the sword of Orla to the spouse of his love; that she may shew it to her her fon, with tears, to kindle his foul to war." "Son of the mournful tale," faid Fingal, "why dost thou awaken my tears? One day the warriors must die, and the children see their useless arms in the hall. But, Orla! thy tomb shall rife. Thy white-bosomed spouse shall weep over thy fword."

They fought on the heath of Lena. Feeble was the arm of Orla. The fword of Fingal descended, and clift his shield in twain. It fell and glittered on the ground, as the moon on the ruffled stream. "King of Morven," faid the hero, "lift thy fword and pierce my breaft. Wounded and faint from battle, my friends have left me here. The mournful tale shall come to my love, on the banks of the streamy Lota; when the is alone in the wood; and the ruftling blast in the leaves !"

"No;" faid the king of Morven, "I will never wound thee, Orla. On the banks of Lota let her fee thee, escape from the hands of war. Let thy grey-haired father, who, perhaps, is blind with age. Let him hear the found of thy voice, and brighten within his hall. With joy let the hero rife, and fearch for his fon with his hands!" " But never will he find him, Fingal;" faid the youth of the streamy Lota. "On Lena's heath I must die: foreign bards shall talk of me. My broad belt covers my wound of death. I give it to the wind !"

The dark blood poured from his fide, he fell pale on the heath of Lena. Fingal bent over him as he dies, and called his younger chiefs; "Ofcar and Fillan, my fons, raife high the memory of Orla. Here let the dark-haired hero rest, far from the spouse of his love. Here let him rest in his narrow house far from the found of Lota. The feeble will find his bow at home; but will not be able to bend it. His faithful dogs howl on his hills; his boars, which he ufed to purfue, rejoice. Fallen is the arm of battle! the mighty among the valiant is low! Exalt the voice and blow the horn, ye fons of the king of Morven! Let us go back to Swaran, to fend the night away on fong. Fillan, Ofcar, and Ryno, fly over the heath of Lena. Where, Ryno, art thou, young fon of fame? Thou art not wont to be the laft to answer thy father's woice!"

" Ryno," faid Ullin first of bards, " is with the awful forms of his fathers. With 'Trathal king of shields; with Trenmor of mighty deeds. The youth is low, the youth is pale, he lies on Lena's heath!" "Fell the fwiftest in the race," faid the king, "the first to bend the bow? Thou fcarce haft been known to me? why did young Ryno fall? But fleep thou foftly on Lena, Fingal shall foon behold thee. Soon shall my voice be heard no more, and my footsteps cease to be feen. The bards will tell of Fingal's name. The stones will talk of me. But Ryno, thou art low indeed! thou hast not received thy fame. Ullin, strike the harp for Ryno; tell what the chief would have been. Farewel, thou first in every field! No more shall I direct thy dart! Thou that haft been fo fair! I behold thee not. Farewel." The tear is on the cheek of the king, for terrible was his fon in war. His fon! that was like a beam of fire by night on a hill; when the forests fink down in its course, and the traveller trembles at the found! But the winds drive it beyond the steep. It finks from fight, and darkness prevails.

"Whose fame is in that dark-green tomb," begun the king of generous shells? "four stones Vol. I. M with with their heads of moss stand there! They mark the narrow house of death. Near it let Ryno rest. A neighbour to the brave let him lie. Some chief of fame is here, to fly, with my fon, on clouds. O Ullin! raife the fongs of old. Awake their memory in their tomb. If in the field they never fled, my fon shall rest by their side. He shall rest, far distant from Morven, on Lena's refounding plains !"

" Here," faid the bard of fong, " here reft the first of heroes. Silent is Lamderg * in this place : dumb is Ullin, king of fwords : And who foft finiling from her cloud, shews me her face of love? Why, daughter, why fo pale art thou, first of the maids of Cromla? Dost thou sleep with the foes in battle, white-bosomed daughter of Tuathal? Thou haft been the love of thousands, but Lamderg was thy love. He came to Tura's mosfy towers, and striking his dark buckler, fpoke:" " Where is Gelchoffa, my love, the daughter of the noble Tuathal? I left her in the hall of Tura, when I fought with great Ulfada. Return foon, O Lamderg! fhe faid, for here I fit in grief. Her white breaft rofe with fighs. Her cheek was wet with tears. But I fee her not coming to meet me; to footh my foul after Silent is the hall of my joy! I hear not the voice of the bard. Bran + does not shake his chains at the gate, glad at the coming of Lamderg. Where is Gelchoffa, my love, the mild daughter of the generous Tuathal?"

" Lamderg !"

^{*} Lamh-dhearg fignifies bloody band. Gelchoffa, white legged. Tuathal, furly. Ulfadda, long board. Ferchios, the conqueror of men.

⁺ Bran is a common name of grey-hounds to this day. It is a cuftom in the north of Scotland, to give the names of the heroes mentioned in this poem, to their dogs; a proof that they are familiar to the ear, and their fame generally known.

"Lamderg!" fays Ferchios fon of Aidon, Gelchoffa moves stately on Cromla. She and the maids of the bow pursued the flying deer!" Ferchios!" replied the chief of Cromla, "no noise meets the ear of Lamderg! No found is in the woods of Lena. No deer fly in my fight. No panting dog pursues. I see not Gelchoffa my love, fair as the full moon setting on the hills. Go, Ferchios, go to Allad *, the grey-haired son of the rock. His dwelling is in the circle of stones. He may know of the bright Gelchoffa!"

"The fon of Aidon went. He spoke to the ear of age. Allad! dweller of rocks: thou that tremblest alone! what saw thine eyes of age?" I saw," answered Allad the old, "Ullin the son of Cairbar. He came, in darkness, from Cromla. He hummed a surly song, like a blast in a leassless wood. He entered the hall of Tura. "Lamderg," he said, "most dreadful of men, fight or yield to Ullin." "Lamderg," replied Gelchossa, "the son of battle, is not here. He sights Ulfada mighty chies. He is not here, thou first of men! But Lamderg never yields. He will sight the son of Cairbar!" "Lovely art thou," said terrible Ullin, "daughter of the generous Tuathal. I earry thee to Cairbar's halls. The valiant shall have Gelchossa. Three days I remain on Cromla, to wait that son of battle, Lamderg. On the sourch Gelchossa is mine; if the mighty Lamderg slies."

the mighty Lamderg flies."

"Allad!" faid the chief of Cromla, " peace to thy dreams in the cave. Ferchios, found the M 2

^{*} Allad is a druid: he is called the fon of the rock, from his dwelling in a cave; and the circle of ftones here mentioned is the pale of the druidical temple. He is here confulted as one who had a fupernatural knowledge of things; from the druids, no doubt, came the ridiculous notion of the fecond fight which prevailed in the highlands and ifles.

horn of Lamderg, that Ullin may hear in his halls." Lamderg, like a roaring ftorm, afcended the hill from Tura. He hummed a furly fong as he went, like the noise of a falling stream. He darkly flood upon the hill, like a cloud varying its form to the wind. He rolled a stone, the fign of war. Ullin heard in Cairbar's hall. The hero heard, with joy, his foe. He took his father's spear. A smile brightens his dark-brown cheek, as he places his fword by his fide. The dagger glittered in his hand. He whiftled as he went.

Gelchoffa faw the filent chief, as a wreath of mist ascending the hill. She struck her white and heaving breast; and filent, tearful, feared for Lamderg. "Cairbar, hoary chief of shells," faid the maid of the tender hand, "I must bend the bow on Cromla. I fee the dark-brown hinds!" She hafted up the hill. In vain! the gloomy heroes fought. Why should I tell to Selma's king how wrathful heroes fight? Fierce Ullin fell. Young Lamderg came, all pale to the daughter of generous Tuathal ! " What blood, my love?" she trembling said: " what blood runs down my warrior's side?" " It is Ullin's blood," the chief replied, " thou fairer than the snow! Gelchossa, let me rest here a little while." The mighty Lamderg died! "And fleepest thou so soon on earth, O chief of shady Tura?" Three days she mourned beside her love. The hunters found her cold. They raifed this tomb above the tree. Thy fon, O king of Morven, may rest here with heroes!

" And here my fon shall rest," faid Fingal. The voice of their fame is in mine ears. Fillan and Fergus! bring hither Orla; the pale youth of the stream of Lota! Not unequalled shall Ryno lie in earth, when Orla is by his fide. daughters daughters of Morven! ye maids of the streamy Lota weep! Like a tree they grew on the hills. They have fallen like the oak of the defart; when it lies across a stream, and withers in the wind. Ofcar! chief of every youth! thou sees how they have fallen. Be thou like them, on earth renowned. Like them the song of bards. Terrible were their forms in battle; but calm was Ryno in the days of peace. He was like the bow of the shower seen far distant on the stream; when the sun is setting on Mora; when silence dwells on the hill of deer. Rest, youngest of my sons! rest, O Ryno! on Lena. We too shall be no more. Warriors one day must fall!"

Such was thy grief, thou king of fwords, when Ryno lay on earth. What must the grief of Ossian be, for thou thyself art gone! I hear not thy distant voice on Cona. My eyes perceive thee not. Often forlorn and dark I fit at thy tomb; and feel it with my hands. When I think I hear thy voice, it is but the passing blast. Fingal has long since fallen asleep, the ruler of the war!

Then Gaul and Ofiian fat with Swaran, on the foft green banks of Lubar. I touched the harp to pleafe the king. But gloomy was his brow. He rolled his red eyes towards Lena. The hero mourned his hoft. I raifed mine eyes to Cromla's brow. I faw the fon of generous Semo. Sad and flow he retired, from his hill, towards the lonely cave of Tura. He faw Fingal victorious, and mixed his joy with grief. The fun is bright on his armour. Connal flowly strode behind. They sunk behind the hill, like two pillars of the fire of night: when winds pursue them over the mountain, and the slaming heath resounds! Beside a stream of roaring foam his cave is in a rock. One tree bends above it. The rushing winds echo against its sides. Here rests the chief of Erin, the fon of generous Semo. His thoughts are on the battles he loft. The tear is on his cheek. He mourned the departure of his fame, that fled like the mift of Cona. O Bragela! thou art too far remote, to cheer the foul of the hero. But let him fee thy bright form in his mind: that his thoughts may return to the lonely fun-beam of his love!

Who comes with the locks of age? It is the fon of fongs. " Hail, Carril of other times ! Thy voice is like the harp in the halls of Tura. Thy words are pleafant as the shower, which falls on the funny field. Carril of the times of old, why comest thou from the son of the generous

Semo?"

" Offian, king of fwords," replied the bard, "thou best can raise the song. Long hast thou been known to Carril, thou ruler of war! Often have I touched the harp to lovely Evirallin. Thou too hast often joined my voice, in Branno's hall of generous shells. And often, amidst our voices, was heard the mildest Evirallin. One day fhe fung of Cormac's fall, the youth, who died for her love. I faw the tears on her cheek, and on thine, thou chief of men! Her foul was touched for the unhappy, though she loved him not. How fair among a thousand maids, was the daughter of generous Branno !"

" Bring not, Carril," I replied, " bring not her memory to my mind. My foul must melt at the remembrance. My eyes must have their tears. Pale in the earth is she, the foftly-blushing fair of my love! But fit thou on the heath, O bard ! and let us hear thy voice. It is pleafant as the gale of fpring, that fighs on the hunter's ear; when he awakens from dreams of joy, and has heard the mufic of the spirits of the hill !"

F I N G A L:

AN ANCIENT

EPIC POEM.

BOOK VI.

ARGUMENT to BOOK VE

Night comes on. Fingal gives a feast to his army, at which Swaran is prefent. The king commands Ullin his bard to give the fong of peace; a custom always observed at the end of a war. Ullin relates the actions of Trenmor, great grandfather to Fingal, in Scandinavia, and his marriage with Inibaca, the daughter of a king of Lochlin who was ancestor to Swaran; which consideration, together with his being brother to Agandecca, with whom Fingal was in love in his youth, induced the king to release him, and permit him to return, with the remains of his army, into Lochlin, upon his promife of never returning to Ireland, in a hostile manner. The night is spent in settling Swaran's departure, in fongs of bards, and in a conversation in which the ftory of Grumal is introduced by Fingal Morning comes. Swaran departs; Fingal goes on a hunting party, and finding Cuthullin in the cave of Tura, comforts him, and fets fail, the next day, for Scotland; which concludes the poem-

F I N G A L;

AN ANCIENT

EPIC POEM.

IN SIX BOOKS.

BOOK IV.

THE clouds of night come rolling down. Darknefs refts on the fteeps of Cromla. The ftars of the north arife over the rolling of Erin's waves: they shew their heads of fire, through the flying mist of heaven. A distant wind roars in the wood. Silent and dark is the plain of death! Still on the dusky Lena arose in my cars the voice of Carril. He sung of the friends of our youth; the days of former years; when we met on the banks of Lego: when we sent round the joy of the shell. Cromla, answered to his voice. The ghosts of those he sang came in their rustling winds. They were seen to bend with joy, towards the found of their praise!

Be thy foul bleft, O Carril! in the midst of thy eddying winds. O that thou wouldst come to my hall, when I am alone by night! And thou dost come, my friend. I hear often thy light hand on my harp; when it hangs, on the distant wall, and the feeble found touches my ear. Why dost thou not speak to me in my grief, and tell when I shall behold my friends?

But thou paffeft away in thy murmuring blaft; the wind whiftles thro' the grey hair of Offian !

Now, on the fide of Mora, the heroes gathered to the feast. A thousand aged oaks are burning to the wind. The strength * of the shells goes round. The fouls of warriors brighten with joy. But the king of Lochlin is filent. Sorrow reddens in the eyes of his pride. He often turned toward Lena. He remembered that he fell. Fingal leaned on the shield of his fathers. grey locks flowly waved on the wind, and glittered to the beam of night. He faw the grief of Swaran, and spoke to the first of bards.

" Raife, Ullin, raife the fong of peace. O footh my foul from war! Let mine ear forget, in the found, the difinal noise of arms. Let a hundred harps be near to gladden the king of Lochlin. He must depart from us with joy. None ever went fad from Fingal. Ofcar ! the lightning of my fword is against the strong in fight. Peaceful it lies by my fide when warriors yield in war."

"Trenmor +," faid the mouth of fongs, " lived in the days of other years. He bounded over the waves of the north: companion of the ftorm! The high rocks of the land of Lochlin; its groves of murmuring founds appeared to the hero through mist: he bound his white-bosomed fails. Trenmor purfued the boar, that roared through the woods of Gormal. Many had fled from

+ Tremmor was great grandfather to Fingal. The ftory is introduced to facilitate the difmission of Swaran.

^{*} The ancient Celtæ brewed beer, and they were no ftranpers to mead. Several ancient poems mention wax lights and wine as common in the halls of Fingal. The Caledonians, in their frequent incursions to the province, might become acquainted with those conveniencies of life, and introduce them into their own country, among the booty which they carried from South Britain.

from its presence: but it rolled in death on the spear of Trenmor. Three chiefs, who beheld the deed, told of the mighty stranger. They told that he stood, like a pillar of fire, in the bright arms of his valour. The king of Lochlin prepared the feast. He called the blooming Trenmor. Three days he feasted at Gormal's windy towers; and received his choice in the combat. The land of Lochlin had no hero, that yielded not to Trenmor. The shell of joy went round with songs, in praise of the king of Morven. He that came over the waves, the first of mighty men!

Now when the fourth grey morn arofe, the hero launched his ship. He walked along the filent shore, and called for the rushing wind: For loud and distant he heard the blast murmuring behind the groves. Covered over with arms of steel, a son of the woody Gormal appeared. Red was his cheek and fair his hair. His skin like the snow of Morven. Mild rolled his blue and smiling eye, when he spoke to the king of fwords.

"STAY, Trenmor, flav thou first of men, thou haft not conquered Lonval's fon. My fword has often met the brave. The wife fhun the itrength of my bow." "Thou fair-haired youth," Trenmor replied, "I will not fight with Lonval's fon. Thine arm is feeble, fun-beam of youth! Retire to Gormal's dark-brown hinds." "But I will retire," replied the youth, " with the fword of Trenmor; and exult in the found of my fame. The virgins shall gather with fmiles, around him who conquered mighty Trenmor. They shall figh with the fighs of love, and admire the length of thy fpear; when I thali carry it among thousands; when I lift the glittering point to the fun." er Tho

"Thou shalt never carry my spear," faid the angry king of Morven. "Thy mother shall find thee pale on the shore; and, looking over the dark-blue deep, fee the fails of him that flew her fon!" "I will not lift the spear," replied the youth, " my arm is not strong with years. But, with the feathered dart, I have learned to pierce a diffant foe. Throw down that heavy mail of steel. Trenmor is covered from death. I first. will lay my mail on earth. Throw now thy dart, thou king of Morven!" He faw the heaving of her breaft. It was the fifter of the king. had feen him in the hall: and loved his face of youth. The fpear dropt from the hand of Trenmor: he bent his red cheek to the ground. She was to him a beam of light that meets the fons of the cave; when they revisit the fields of the sun, and bend their aching eyes !

"Chief of the windy Morven," begun the maid of the arms of fnow, "let me reft in thy bounding ship, far from the love of Corlo. For he, like the thunder of the defart, is terrible to Inibaca. He loves me in the gloom of pride-He shakes ten thousand spears!" Reft thou in peace," faid the mighty Trenmor, "reft behind the shield of my fathers. I will not sly from the chief, though he shakes ten thousand spears!" Three days he waited on the shore. He sent his horn abroad. He called Corlo to battle, from all his echoing hills. But Corlo came not to battle. The king of Lochlin descends from his half. He feasted on the roaring shore. He gave the maid to Trenmor!

"King of Lochlin," faid Fingal, "thy blood flows in the veins of thy foe. Our fathers met in baiele, because they loved the strife of spears. But often did they feast in the hall: and fend round the joy of the shell. Let thy face brighten with gladness, and thine ear delight in the harp. Dreadful as the storm of thine ocean, thou hast poured thy valour forth; thy voice has been like the voice of thousands when they engage in war. Raise, to-morrow, raise thy white fails to the wind, thou brother of Agandecca! Bright as the beam of noon, she comes on my mournful soul. I have seen thy tears for the fair one. I spared thee in the halls of Starno; when my sword was red with slaughter; when my eye was full of tears for the maid. Or dost thou chuse the fight? The combat which thy fathers gave to Trenmor is thine! that thour mayest depart renowned, like the sun fetting in the west!"

"King of the race of Morven," faid the chief of refounding Lochlin! "never will Swaran fight with thee, first of a thousand heroes! I have seen thee in the halls of Starno: sew were thy years beyond my own. When shall I, I said to my soul, lift the spear like the noble Fingal? We have fought heretofore, O warrior, on the side of the shaggy Malmor; after my waves had carried me to thy halls, and the feast of a thousand shells was spread. Let the bards send his name who overcame to suture years, for noble was the strife of Malmor! But many of the ships of Lochlin have lost their youths on Lena. Take these, thou king of Morven, and be the friend of Swaran! When thy sons shall come to Gormal, the feast of shells shall be spread, and the combat offered on the vale."

"Nor ship," replied the king, "shall Fingal take, nor land of many hills. The defart is enough to me, with all its deer and woods. Rife on thy waves again, thou noble friend of Agandecca! Spread thy white fails to the beam of the morning; return to the echoing hills of Gormal." Bleft be thy foul, thou king of shells," faid Swaran of the dark-brown shield. "In peace thou art the gale of spring. In war the mountain-storm. Take now my hand in friendship, king of echoing Selma! Let thy bards mourn those who fell. Let Erin give the sons of Lochlin to earth. Raise high the mostly stones of their same: that the children of the north hereaster may behold the place where their fathers fought. The hunter may say, when he leans on a mostly tomb, here Fingal and Swaran sought, the heroes of other years. Thus hereaster shall he say, and our same shall last for ever!"

morning;

"Swaran," faid the king of hills, " to-day our fame is greateft. We thall pass away like a dream. No found will remain in our fields of war. Our tombs will be lost in the heath. The hunter shall not know the place of our rest. Our names may be heard in song. What avails it, when our strength hath ceased? O Ossian, Carril, and Ullin! you know of heroes that are no more. Give us the song of other years. Let the night pass away on the found, and morning return with joy."

We gave the fong to the kings. An hundred harps mixed their found with our voice. The face of Swaran brightened, like the full moon of heaven; when the clouds vanish away, and leave her calm and broad, in the midit of the fix!

her calm and broad, in the midit of the iky!

"Where, Carril," faid the great Fingal,

"Carril of other times! Where is the fon of Semo, the king of the ifle of mift? has he retired, like the meteor of death, to the dreary cave of Tura?" "Cuthullin," faid Carril of other times, "lies in the dreary cave of Tura.

His hand is on the fword of his ftrength. His thoughts

thoughts on the battles he loft. Mournful is the king of fpears; till now unconquered in war. He lends his fword to reft on the fide of Fingal; For, like the ftorm of the defart, thou haft fcattered all his foes. Take, O Fingal! the fword of the hero. His fame is departed like mift, when it flies, before the ruftling wind, along the brightening vale."

"No:" replied the king, "Fingal shall never take his sword. His arm is mighty in war: his same shall never sail. Many have been overcome in battle; whose renown arose from their sall. O Swaran! king of resounding woods, give all thy grief away. The vanquished, if brave, are renowned. They are like the son in a cloud, when he hides his sace in the south, but looks again on the hills of grafs!

"Grumal was a chief of Cona. He fought the battle on every coast. His foul rejoiced in blood. His ear in the din of arms. He poured his warriors on Craca; Craca's king met him from his grove: for then, within the circle of Brumo *, he spoke to the stone of power. Fierce was the battle of the heroes, for the maid of the breaft of fnow. The fame of the daughter of Craca had reached Grumal at the streams of Cona: he vowed to have the white-bosomed maid, or die on echoing Craca. Three days they strove together, and Grumal on the fourth was bound. Far from his friends they placed him, in the horrid circle of Brumo; where often, they faid, the ghosts of the dead howled round the stone of their fear. But he afterwards fhone, lik a pillar of the light of heaven. They fell fell by his mighty hand. Grumal had all his fame!"

^{*} This paffage alludes to the religion of the king of Craca.

"Raife, ye bards of other times," continued the great Fingal, "raife high the praife of heroes: that my foul may fettle on their fame; that the mind of Swaran may cease to be sad." They lay in the heath of Mora. The dark winds rustled over the chiefs. An hundred voices, at once, arofe: a hundred harps were strung. They fung of other times; the mighty chiefs of former years! When now shall I hear the bard? When rejoice at the fame of my fatners? The harp is not strung on Morven. The voice of music afcends not on Cona. Dead, with the mighty, is the bard. Fame is in the defart no more.

Morning trembles with the beam of the east; it glimmers on Comla's fide. Over Lena is heard the horn of Swaran. The fons of the ocean gather around. Silent and fad they rife on the wave. The blast of Erin is behind their fails. White, as the mift of Morven, they float along the fea. " Call," faid Fingal, " call my dogs, the long-bounding fons of the chafe. Call whitebreafted Bran and the furly ftrength of Luath! Fillan, and Ryno; but he is not here! My fon rests on the bed of death. Fillan and Fergus! blow the horn, that the joy of the chace may arise: that the deer of Cromla may hear and start at the lake of roes."

The shrill found spreads along the wood. The fons of heathy Cromla arife. A thousand dogs. fly off at once, grey-bounding through the heath. A deer fell by every dog; three by the whitebreasted Bran. He brought them, in their flight, to Fingal, that the joy of the king might. be great! One deer fell at the tomb of Ryno. The grief of Fingal returned. He faw how peaceful

peaceful lay the stone of him, who was the first at the chace! "No more shalt thou rise, O my fon! to partake of the feast of Cromla. Soon will thy tomb be hid, and the grass grow rank on thy grave. The sons of the feeble shall pass along. They shall not know where the mighty lie.

"Offian and Fillan, fons of my ftrength! Gaul, chief of the blue fteel of war! let us afcend the hill to the cave of Tura. Let us find the chief of the battles of Erin. Are these the walls of Tura? grey and lonely they rise on the heath. The chief of shells is sad, and the halls are filent and lonely. Come, let us find Cuthullin, and give him all our joy. But is that Cuthullin, O Fillan, or a pillar of smoke on the heath? The wind of Cromla is on my eyes. I diftinguish not my friend."

"Fingal!" replied the youth, " it is the fon of Semo! Gloomy and fad is the hero! his hand is on his fword. Hail to the fon of battle, breaker of the fhields!" "Hail to thee," replied Cuthullin, "hail to all the fons of Morven! Delightful is thy prefence, O Fingal! it is the fun on Cromla; when the hunter mourns his abfence for a feafon, and fees him between the clouds. Thy fons are like ftars that attend thy courfe. They give light in the night. It is not thus thou haft feen me, O Fingal! returning from the wars of thy land: when the kings of the world * had fled, and joy returned to the hill of hinds!" "Many are thy words, Cuthullin."

^{*} This is the only paffage in the poem wherein the wars of Fingal againft the Romans are alluded to: the Roman emperor is diffinguished in old composition by the title of king of the world.

lin," faid Connan * of fmall renown. "Thy words are many, fon of Seno, but where are thy deeds in arms? Why did we come, over ocean, to aid thy feeble fword? Thou flyeft to thy cave of grief, and Connan fights thy battles. Refign to me thefe arms of light. Yield them, thou chief of Erin." "No hero," replied the chief, "ever fought the arms of Cuthullin! and had a thoufand heroes fought them, it were in vain; thou gloomy youth! I fled not to the cave of grief, till Erin failed at her streams."

"Youth of the feeble arm," faid Fingal, "Connan ceafe thy words! Cuthullin is renowned in battle; terrible over the world. Often have I heard thy fame, thou ftormy chief of Inis-fail. Spread now thy white fails for the ifle of mift. See Bragela leaning on her rock. Her tender eye is in tears; the winds lift her long hair from her heaving breaft. She liftens to the breeze of night, to hear the voice of thy rowers; to hear the fong of the sea! the sound of thy diftant harp!"

"Long fhall fhe liften in vain. Cuthullin shall never return! How can I behold Bragela, to raise the figh of her breast? Fingal, I was always victorious, in battles of other spears!" And hereaster thou shalt be victorious, said Fingal of generous shells. "The same of Cuthullin shall grow, like the branchy tree of Cromla. Many battles await thee, O chief! Many shall be the wounds of thy hand! Bring hither.

* Connan was of the family of Morni. He is mentioned in feveral other poems, and always appears with the fame character. The poet passed him over in silence till now, and his behaviour here deserves no better usage.

+ The practice of finging when they row is univerfal among the inhabitants of the northwest coast of Scotland and the isles. It deceives time, and inspirits the rowers. hither, Ofcar, the deer! Prepare the feast of fhells. Let our fouls rejoice after danger, and our friends delight in our presence!"

We fat. We feasted. We fung. The foul of Cuthullin rose. The strength of his arm returned. Gladness brightened along his face. Ullin gave the fong; Carril raised the voice. I joined the bards, and sung of battles of the spear. Battles! where I often fought. Now I fight no more! The same of my former deeds is ceased. I sit forlorn at the tombs of my friends!

Thus the night passed away in song. We brought back the morning with joy. Fingal arose on the heath, and shook his glittering spear. He moved first toward the plains of Lena. We followed in all our arms.

"Spread the fail," faid the king, "feize the winds as they pour from Lena." We rose on the wave with songs. We rushed, with joy, through the soam of the deep.

LATHMON:

£

P O E M.

ARGUMENT.

Lathmon, a British prince, taking advantage of Fingal's absence on an expedition in Ireland, made a descent on Morven, and advanced within sight of Schma, the royal residence. Fingal arrived in the mean time, and Lathmon retreated to a hill, where his army was surprized by right, and himself taken prisoner by Ossan and Gaul the son of Morni. The poem opens, with the first appearance of Fingal on the coast of Morven, and ends, it may be supposed, about noon the next day.

T. A H M O N: T

P 0 F. M.

SELMA, thy halls are filent. There is no found in the woods of Morven. The wave tumbles alone on the coast. The filent beam of the fun is on the field. The daughters of Morven come forth, like the bow of the shower; they look towards green Erin for the white fails of the king. He had promifed to return, but the winds of the north arose!

Who pours from the eastern hill, like a stream of darkness! It is the host of Lathmon. He has heard of the absence of Fingal. He trusts in the wind of the north. His foul brightens with joy. Why doft thou come, O Lathmon? The mighty are not in Selma. Why comest thou with thy forward spear? Will the daughters of Morven fight? But stop, O mighty stream, in thy course! Does not Lathmon behold thefe fails? Why doft thou vanish, Lathmon, like the mist of the lake? But the fqually ftorm is behind thee; Fingal purfues thy steps!

The king of Morven had started from sleep, as we rolled on the dark-blue wave. He stretched his hand to his fpear, his heroes rofe around. We knew that he had feen his fathers, for they often descended to his dreams, when the sword of the foe rose over the land; and the battle darkened before us. "Whither haft thou fled, O wind?" faid the king of Morven.

thou ruftle in the chambers of the fouth, purfuest thou the shower in other lands? Why dost thou not come to my fails? to the blue face of my feas? The foe is in the land of Morven, and the king is absent far. But let each bind on his mail, and each affume his shield. Stretch every spear over the wave; let every sword be unsheathed. Lathmon * is before us with his host: he that fled + from Fingal on the plains of Lona. But he returns, like a collected stream, and his roar is between our hills."

Such were the words of Fingal. We rushed into Carmona's bay. Offian afcended the hill: He thrice struck his boffy shield. The rock of Morven replied; the bounding roes came forth. The foe was troubled in my prefence: he collected his darkened hoft. I flood, like a cloud on the hill, rejoicing in the arms of my youth.

Morni ‡ fat beneath a tree, at the roaring waters of Strumon ||: his locks of age are grey: he leans forward on his staff; young Gaul is near the hero, hearing the battles of his father. Often did he rife, in the fire of his foul, at the mighty deeds of Morni. The aged heard the found of Offian's shield: he knew the fign of war. He started at once from his place. His grey hair

parted

+ He alludes to a battle wherein Fingal had defeated

Lathmon.

Stru'-moné, fiream of the bill. Here the proper name of a rivulet in the neighbourhood of Selma.

It is faid by tradition, that it was the intelligence of Lathmon's invasion, that occasioned Fingal's return from Ireland; though Offian, more poetically, afcribes the cause of Fingal's knowledge to his dream.

[#] Morni was chief of a numerous tribe, in the days of Fingal, and his father Comhal. The last mentioned hero was killed in battle against Morni's tribe; but the valour and conduct of Fingal reduced them, at last, to obedience. We find the two heroes perfectly reconciled in this poem.

parted on his back. He remembered the deeds of other years.

" My fon," he faid to fair-haired Gaul, " I hear the found of war. The king of Morven is returned, his fignals are fpread on the wind. Go to the halls of Strumon; bring his arms to Morni. Bring the shield of my father's latter years, for my arm begins to fail. Take thou thy armour, O Gaul! and rush to the first of thy battles. Let thine arm reach to the renown of thy fathers. Be thy courfe in the field, like the eagle's wing. Why shouldst thou fear death, my fon? the valiant fall with fame; their shields turn the dark stream of danger away; renown dwells on their aged hairs. Dost thou not fee, O Gaul! how the steps of my age are honoured? Morni moves forth, and the young meet him, with awe, and turn their eyes, with filent joy, on his course. But I never fled from danger, my fon! my fword lightened through the darkness of war. The stranger melted before me; the mighty were blasted in my presence."

Gaul brought the arms to Morni: the aged warrior is covered with ficel. He took the fpear in his hand, which was frained with the blood of the valiant. He came towards Fingal, his fon attended his fteps. The fon of Comhal arofe before him with joy, when he came in his locks of age.

"Chief of roaring Strumon!" faid the rifing foul of Fingal; "do I behold thee in arms, after thy ftrength has failed? Often has Morni shone in fight, like the beam of the ascending sun; when he disperses the storms of the hill, and brings peace to the glittering fields. But why didst thou not rest in thine age? Thy renown is in the song. The people behold thee, and bless Vol. I.

the departure of mighty Morni. Why didit thou not rest in thine-age? The soe will vanish before Fingal!"

"Son of Comhal," replied the chief, "the Arength of Morni's arm has failed. I attempt to draw the sword of my youth, but it remains in its place. I throw the spear, but it falls short of the mark. I feel the weight of my shield. We decay like the grass of the hill: our strength returns no more. I have a son, O Fingal! his soul has delighted in Morni's deeds; but his stword has not been listed against a soe, neither has his same begun. I come with him to war; to direct his arm in fight. His renown will be a light to my soul, in the dark hour of my departure. O that the name of Morni were forgot among the people! that the heroes would only say, "Behold the father of Gaul!"

"King of Strumon," Fingal replied, "Gaul shall lift the sword in fight. But he shall lift it before Fingal; my arm shall defend his youth. But rest thou in the halls of Selma; and hear of our renown. Bid the harp to be strung, and the voice of the bard to arise, that those who sall may rejoice in their same; and the soul of Morni brighten with joy. Ossian! thou hast sought in battles: the blood of strangers is on thy spear: thy course be with Gaul, in the strife; but depart not from the side of Fingal! left the foe should find you alone, and your same sail in my prefence."

"I faw * Gaul in his arms; my foul was mixed with his. The fire of the battle was in his eyes! he looked to the foe with joy. We fooke the words

Offian speaks. The contrast between the old and young heroes is strongly marked. The circumstance of the latter's drawing their swords is well imagined, and agrees with the impatience of young foldiers, just entered upon action.

words of friendship in secret; the lightning of our swords poured together; for we drew them behind the wood, and tried the strength of our arms on the empty air."

Night came down on Morven. Fingal fat at the beam of the oak. Morni fat by his side with all his grey waving locks. Their words were of other times, of the mighty deeds of their fathers. Three bards, at times, touched the harp: Ullin was near with his fong. He fung of the mighty Comhal; but darkness * gathered on Morni's brow. He rolled his red eye on Ullin: at once ceased the song of the bard. Fingal observed the aged hero, and he mildly spoke. "Chief of Strumon, why that darkness? Let the days of other years be forgot. Our fathers contended in war; but we meet together, at the feaft. Our fwords are turned on the foc of our land: he melts before us on the field. Let the days of our fathers be forgot, hero of mosfly Strumon 1"

"King of Morven," replied the chief, "I remember thy father with joy. He was terrible in battle; the rage of the chief was deadly. My eyes were full of tears, when the king of heroes fell. The valiant fall, O Fingal! the feeble remain on the hills! How many heroes have paffed away, in the days of Morni! Yet J did not fhun the battle; neither did I fly from the ftrife of the valiant. Now let the friends of [•] Ullin had chosen ill the subject of his song. The darkness which gathered on Morn's trow, did not proceed from any diske he had to Comhal's name, though they were soes, but from his fear that the song would awaken Fingal to a remembrance of the seuds which had subsisted of old between the families. Fingal's speech on this occasion abounds with generosity and good sense.

N 2 Fingal

Fingal reft; for the night is around; that they may rife, with firength, to battle againft carborne Lathmon. I hear the found of his hoft, like thunder moving on the hills. Offian! and fair-haired Gaul! ye are young and fwift in the race. Observe the foes of Fingal from that woody hill. But approach them not, your fathers are not near to shield you. Let not your fame fall at once. The valour of youth may fail!"

We heard the words of the chief with joy. We moved in the clang of our arms. Our steps are on the woody hill. Heaven burns with all its stars. The meteors of death fly over the field. The distant noise of the foe reached our ears. It was then Gaul spoke, in his valour:

his hand half-unsheathed the sword.

"Son of Fingal!" he faid, "why burns the foul of Gaul? My heart beats high. My fteps are difordered; my hand trembles on my fword. When I look towards the foe, my foul lightens before me. I fee their fleeping hoft. Tremble thus the fouls of the valiant in battles of the fpear? How would the foul of Morni rife if we fhould rufh on the foe! Our renown would grow in fong: Our fteps would be ftately in the eyes of the brave."

"Son of Morni," I replied, "my foul delights in war. I delight to shine in battle alone, to give my name to the bards. But what if the foe should prevail; can I behold the eyes of the king? They are terrible in his displeasure, and like the slames of death. But I will not behold them in his wrath! Offian shall prevail or fall. But shall the same of the vanquished rise? They pass like a shade away. But the same of Offian shall rise! His deeds shall be like his father's.

Let us rush in our arms; son of Morni, let us rush to fight. Gaul! if thou shouldst return, go to Selma's lofty hall. Tell to Evirallin that I fell with fame; carry this sword to Branno's daughter. Let her give it to Oscar, when the years of his youth shall arise."

"Son of Fingal," Gaul replied with a figh;

" shall I return after Offian is low? What would my father fay, what Fingal the king of men? The feeble would turn their eyes and fay, "Behold Gaul who left his friend in his blood!" Ye shall not behold me, ye feeble, but in the midft of my renown! Offian! I have heard from my father the mighty deeds of heroes; their mighty deeds when alone; for the foul increases in danger."

"Son of Morni," I replied and strode before him on the heath, " our fathers shall praise our valour, when they mourn our fall. A beam of gladnets thall rife on their fouls, when their eves are full of tears. They will fay, "Our fons have not fallen unknown: they foread death around them." But why should we think of the narrow house? The fword defends the brave. But death purfues the flight of the feeble; their renown is never heard."

We rushed forward through night; we came to the roar of a stream, which bent its blue courfe round the foe, through trees that echoed to its found. We came to the bank of the stream, and faw the sleeping host. Their fires were decayed on the plain; the lonely steps of their fcouts were diftant far. I stretched my spear before me to support my steps over the fiream. But Gaul took my hand, and fpoke the words of the brave. "Shall the fon of Fingal ruth on the fleeping foe ? Shall he come like a blast blast by night, when it overturns the young trees in secret? Fingal did not thus receive his fame, nor dwells renown on the grey hairs of Morni, for actions like these. Strike, Oslian, frike the shield, and let their thousands rise! Let them meet Gaul in his first battle, that he may try the strength of his arm."

My foul rejoiced over the warrior: my bursting tears came down. "And the foe shall meet thee, Gaul!" I said: "the same of Morni's fon shall arise. But rush not too sar, my hero: let the gleam of thy steel be near to Ossian. Let our hands join in slaughter. Gaul! dost thou not behold that rock? Its grey side dimly gleams to the stars. Should the foe prevail, let our back be towards the rock. Then shall they fear to approach our spears; for death is in our hands!"

I ftruck thrice my echoing shield. The starting foe arofe. We rushed on in the found of our arms. Their crowded fteps fly over the heath. They thought that the mighty Fingal was come. The strength of their arms withered away. The found of their flight was like that of flame, when it rushes thro' the blasted groves. It was then the spear of Gaul flew in its strength; it was then his fword arose. Cremor fell; and mighty Leth. Dunthormo struggled in his blood. The ficel ruthed through Crotho's fide, as bent, he rose on his spear; the black stream poured from the wound, and hiffed on the half-extinguifhed oak. Cathmin faw the steps of the hero behind him, he afcended a blafted tree; but the tpear pierced him from behind. Shrieking, panting, he fell. Mofs and withered branches purfue his fall, and ftrew the blue arms of Gaul.

Such were thy deeds, fon of Morni, in the first of thy battles. Nor slept the fword by thy fide, fide, thou last of Fingal's race! Offian rushed forward in his strength; the people fell before him: as the grass by the staff of the boy, when he whistles along the field, and the grey beard of the thistle falls. But careless the youth moves on; his steps are towards the defart. Grey morning rose around us; the winding streams are bright along the heath. The sog gathered on a hill; and the rage of Lathmon rose. He bent the red eye of his wrath: he is silent in his rising grief. He often struck his bossy shield; and his steps are unequal on the heath. I saw the distant darkness of the hero, and I spoke to Morni's son.

"Car-borne chief of Strumon, dost thou behold the foe? They gather on the hill in their wrath. Let our steps be towards the king *. He shall rise in his strength, and the host of Lathmon vanish. Our same is around us, warrior, the eyes of the aged + will rejoice. But let us sty, son of Morni, Lathmon deteends the hill." "Then let our steps be slow," replied the fair-haired Gaul; "left the foe say, with a smile, "Behold the warriors of night. They are, like ghosts, terrible in darkness; they melt away before the beam of the east." Offian, take the shield of Gormar who fell beneath thy spear. The aged heroes will rejoice beholding the deeds of their sons."

Such were our words on the plain, when Sulmath ‡ came to car-borne Lathmon: Sulmath chief of Dutha at the dark-rolling ftream of Duvranna

^{*} Fingal.

[†] Fingal and Morni.

Suil-mhath, a mun of good eye-fight.

Duvranna *. " Why dost thou not rush, fon of Nuath, with a thousand of thy heroes? Why dost thou not descend with thy host, before the warriors fly? Their blue arms are beaming to the rifing light, and their steps are before us on the heath !"

" Son of the feeble hand," faid Lathmon, " fhall my hoft defcend! They are but two, fon of Dutha! shall a thousand lift their steel! Nuäth would mourn, in his hall, for the departure of his fame. His eyes would turn from Lathmon, when the tread of his feet approached. Go thou to the heroes, chief of Dutha! I behold the stately steps of Ossian. His fame is worthy of my fteel! let us contend in fight."

The noble Sulmath came. I rejoiced in the words of the king. I raifed the shield on my arm; Gaul placed in my hand the sword of Morni. We returned to the murmuring ftream; Lathmon came down in his strength. His dark hoft rolled, like clouds, behind him: but the fon of Nuäth was bright in his fteel!

"Son of Fingal," faid the hero, "thy fame has grown on our fall. How many lie there of my people by thy hand, thou king of men! Lift now thy spear against Lathmon; lay the son of Nuath low! Lay him low among his warriors, or thou thyfelf must fall! It shall never be told in my halls that my people fell in my prefence; that they fell in the presence of Lathmon when his fword refted by his fide: the blue eyes of Cutha

* Dubh-bhranna, dark mountain-fleeam. A river in Scotland, which falls into the fea at Banff, ftill retains the name of Duvran. If that is meant in this paffage, Lathmon must have been a prince of the Pictish nation, or those Caledonians who inhabited of old the eaftern coaft of Scotland.

Cutha would roll in tears; her steps be lonely in the vales of Dunlathmon !"

"Neither shall it be told," I replied, "that the fon of Fingal fled. Were his steps covered with darkness, yet would not Offian fly! his sould would meet him and say, "Does the bard of Selma fear the foe?" No: he does not fear the foe. His joy is in the midst of battle!"

Lathmon came on with his fpear. He pierced the shield of Ossian. I selt the cold steel by my side. I drew the sword of Morni. I cut the spear in twain. The bright point sell glittering on earth. The son of Nusth burnt in his wrath. He listed high his founding shield. His dark eyes rolled above it, as bending forward, it shone like a gate of brass! But Ossian's spear pierced the brightness of its bosses, and sunk in a tree that rose behind. The shield hung on the quivering lance! but Lathmon still advanced! Gaul foresaw the fall of the ch'es. He stretched his buckler before my sword; when it descended, in a stream of light, over the king of Dunlathmon!

Lathmon beheld the fon of Morni. The tear frarted from his eye. He threw the fword of his fathers on earth, and fooke the words of the brave. "Why fhould Lathmon fight against the first of men? Your souls are beams from heaven; your swords the stames of death! Who can equal the renown of the heroes, whose deeds are so great in youth? O that ye were in the halls of Nusath, in the green dwelling of Lachmon! then would my father say, that his fon did not yield to the weak: But who comes a mighty stream, along the echoing heath? the little hills are troubled before him; a thousand ghosts are on the beams of his fteel; the ghosts of those who are to fall *, by the arm of the king of refounding Morven. Happy art thou, O Fingal! thy fons shall fight thy wars. They go forth before thee; they return with the steps of their renown!"

N 5

Fingal came, in his mildness, rejoicing in fecret over the deeds of his son. Morni's face brightened with gladness; his aged eyes look faintly through tears of joy. We came to the halls of Selma. We fat around the feast of shells. The maids of song came into our presence, and the mildly blushing Evirallin! Her hair spreads on her neck of snow, her eye rolls in secret on Odian. She touched the harp of music; we bleffed the daughter of Branno!

Fingal rose in his place, and spoke to Lathmon king of fpears. The fword of Trenmor shook by his fide, as high he raifed his mighty arm. "Son of Nuith," he faid, " why doft thou fearch for fame in Morven? We are not of the race of the feeble; our fwords gleam not over the weak. When did we rouse thee, O Lathmon! with the found of war? Fingal does not delight in battle, though his arm is ftrong! My renown grows on the fall of the haughty. The light of my fleel pours on the proud in arms. The battle comes! and the tombs of the valiant rife; the tombs of my people rife, O my fathers! I at last must remain alone! But I will remain renowned; the departure of my foul shall be a stream of light. Lathmon! retire to thy place! Turn thy battles to other lands! The race of Morven are renowned: their foes are the fons of the unhappy!"

^{*} It was thought, in Offian's time, that each perfon had his attending fpirit. The traditions concerning this opinion are dark and unfatisfactory.

D A R-T H U L A:

A

P O E M.

ARGUMENT.

It may not be improper here, to give the ftory which is the foundation of this poem, as it is handed down by tradition. Ufnoth lord of Etha, which is probably that part of Argylefhire which is near Loch Eta, an arm of the fea in Lorn, had three fons, Nathos, Althos, and Ardan by Sliffáma, the daughter of Semo and fifter to the celebrated Cuthullin. The three brothers, when very young, were fent over to Ireland, by their father, to learn the use of arms, under their uncle, Cuthullin, who made a great figure in that kingdom. They were just landed in Ulster when the news of Cuthullin's death arrived. Nathos, though very young, took the command of Cuthullin's army, made head against Cairbar the usurper, and defeated him in feveral battles. Cairbar at last having found means to murder Cormac the lawful king, the army of Nathos shifted fides, and he himfelf was obliged to return into Ulfter, in order to pass over into Scotland.

Dar-thula, the daughter of Colla, with whom Cairbar was in love, refided, at that time, in Seláma, a castle in Ulster: she saw, sell in love, and sled with Nathos; but a storm rising at sea, they were unfortunately driven back on that part of the coast of Ulster, where Cairbar was encamped with his army. The three brothers, after having defended themselves, for some time, with great bravery, were overpowered and slain, and the unfortunate Dar-thula killed herself upon the body of her beloved Nathos.

The poem opens, on the night preceding the death of the fons of Ufnoth, and brings in, by way of epifode, what paffed before. It relates the death of Dar-thula differently from the common tradition; this account is the most probable, as fuicide feems to have been unknown in those early times: for no traces of it are found in the old poetry.

D A R-T H U L A:

P O E M.

DAUGHTER of heaven, fair art thou! the filence of thy face is pleafant! Thou comest forth in loveliness. The stars attend thy blue course in the east. The clouds rejoice in thy prefence, O moon! They brighten their dark-brown fides. Who is like thee in heaven, light of the filent night? The stars are ashamed in thy prefence. They turn away their fparkling eyes. Whither dost thou retire from thy course, when the darkness of thy countenance grows? Hast thou thy hall, like Offian? Dwellest thou in the shadow of gries? Have thy sisters fallen from heaven? Are they who rejoiced with thee, at night, no more? Yes! they have fallen, fair light! and thou dost often retire to mourn. But thou thyself shall fail, one night; and leave thy blue path in heaven. The stars will then lift their heads: they, who were ashamed in thy prefence, will rejoice. Thou art now clothed with thy brightness. Look from thy gates in the fky. Burst the cloud, O wind ! that the daughter of night may look forth! that the shaggy mountains may brighten, and the ocean roll its white waves, in light.

Nathos

Nathos * is on the deep, and Althos, that beam of youth. Ardan is near his brothers. They move in the gloom of their course. The fons of Ufnoth move in darkness, from the wrath of Cairbar + of Erin. Who is that, dim by their fide? The night has covered her beauty! Her hair fighs on ocean's wind. Her robe streams in dusky wreaths. She is like the fair spirit of heaven in the midst of his shadowy mist. Who is it but Dar-thula t, the first of Erin's maids? She has fled from the love of Cairbar, with blue-shielded Nathos. But the winds deceive thee, O Dar-thula! They deny the woody Etha, to thy fails. These are not the mountains of Nathos; nor is that the roar of his climbing waves. 'The halls of Cairbar are near: the towers of the foe lift their heads! Erin stretches its green head into the fea. Tura's bay receives the ship. Where have ye been, ye fouthern winds! when the fonsof my love were deceived? But ye have been fporting on plains, purfuing the thiftle's beard. O that ye had been ruftling in the fails of Nathos, till the hills of Etha arose? till they arose in their clouds, and faw their returning chief! Long haft thou been abfent, Nathos! The day of thy return is past!

But the land of ftrangers faw thee, lovely! thou wast lovely in the eyes of Dar-thula. Thy ^{*} Nathos fignifies youthful, Ailthos, exquifite beauty, Ardan,

21100

[†] Cairbar, who murdered Cormac king of Ireland, and usurped the throne. He was afterwards killed by Ofear the fon of Offian in a fingle combat. The poet, upon other occasions, gives him the epithet of red-haired.

[†] Dar-thúla, or Dart-'huile, a reoman with fine eyes. She was the molt famous beauty of antiquity. To this day, when a woman is praifed for her beauty, the common phrase is, that see is a levely as Dar-thula.

face was like the light of the morning. Thy hair like the raven's wing. Thy foul was generous and mild, like the hour of the fetting fun. Thy words were the gale of the reeds; the gliding ftream of Lora! But when the rage of battle role, thou wast a sea in a storm. The clang of thy arms was terrible: the host vanished at the found of thy course. It was then Dar-thula beheld thee, from the top of her mostly tower: from the tower of Selama *, where her fathers dwelt.

" Lovely art thou, O stranger!" she said, for her trembling foul arose. "Fair art thou in thy battles, friend of the fallen Cormac +! Why dost thou rush on, in thy valour, vouth of the ruddy look? Few are thy hands, in fight, against the dark-browed Cairbar! O that I might be freed from his love ‡! that I might rejoice in the prefence of Nathos! Bleft are the rocks of Etha! they will behold his steps at the chace! they will fee his white bosom, when the winds lift his flowing hair !" Such were thy words, Dar-thula, in Selama's mostly towers. But, now, the night is around thee. The winds have deceived thy fails. The winds have deceived thy fails, Darthula! Their bluftering found is high. Ceafe a little while, O north wind! Let me hear the voice of the lovely. Thy voice is lovely, Darthula, between the ruftling blafts !

" Are

^{*} The word fignifies either beautiful to behold, or a place with a pleafant or wide profect. In early times, they built their houles upon eminences, to command a view of the country, and to prevent their being furprized: many of them, on that account, were called Seláma. The famous Selma of Fingal is derived from the fame root.

[†] Cormac the young king of Ireland, who was privately murdered by Cairbar.

t 'That is, of the love of Cairbar,

"Are these the rocks of Nathos?" she said, "This the roar of his mountain-streams? Comes that beam of light from Usnoth's nightly hall? The mist speaks around; the beam is feeble and distant far. But the light of Dar-thula's soul dwells in the chief of Etha! Son of the generous Usnoth, why that broken sigh? Are we in the land of strangers, chief of echoing Etha!"

"These are not the rocks of Nathos," he replied, " nor this the roar of his streams. No light comes from Etha's halls, for they are distant far. We are in the land of strangers, in the land of cruel Cairbar. The winds have deceived us, Dar-thula. Erin lifts here her hills. Go towards the north, Althos: be thy steps, Ardan, along the coast; that the soe may not come in darkness, and our hopes of Etha fail." "I will go towards that mossy tower, to see who dwells about the beam. Rest, Dar-thula, on the shore! rest in peace, thou lovely light! the sword of Nathos is around thee, like the lightning of heaven!"

He went. She fat alone; fhe heard the rolling of the wave. The big tear is in her eye. She looks for returning Nathos. Her foul trembles at the blaft. She turns her ear towards the tread of his feet. The tread of his feet is not heard. "Where art thou, fon of my love! The roar of the blaft is around me. Dark is the cloudy night. But Nathos does not return. What detains thee, chief of Etha? Have the foes met the hero in the strife of the night?"

He returned, but his face was dark. He had feen his departed friend! It was the wall of Tura. The ghoft of Cuthullin stalked there alone: The sighing of his breast was frequent. The decayed slame of his eyes was terrible! His spear was a column of mist. The stars looked dim through his form. His voice was like hollow wind in a cave: his eye a light seen afar. He told the tale of grief. The soul of Nathos was sad, like the fun in the day of mist, when his face is watery and dim.

column

"Why art thou fad, O Nathos?" faid the lovely daughter of Colla. "Thou art a pillar of light to Dar-thula. The joy of her eyes is in Etha's chief. Where is my friend, but Nathos? My father, my brother is fallen! Silence dwells on Seláma. Sadnefs spreads on the blue streams of my land. My friends have fallen, with Cormac. The mighty were slain in the battles of Erin. Hear, son of Usnoth! hear, O Nathos!

my tale of grief.

"Evening darkened on the plain. The blue ftreams failed before mine eyes. The unfrequent blaft came ruftling, in the tops of Seláma's groves. My feat was beneath a tree, on the walls of my fathers. Truthil paft before my foul: the brother of my love: He that was abient in battle, againft the haughty Cairbar! Bending on his fpear, the grey-haired Colla came. His downcaft face is dark, and forrow dwells in his foul. His fword is on the fide of the hero: the helm to f his fathers on his head. The battle grows in his breaft. He ftrives to hide the tear."

"Dar-thula, my daughter," he faid, "thou art the last of Colla's race! Truthil is fallen in battle. The chief of Seláma is no more! Cairbar comes, with his thousands, towards Seláma's walls. Colla will meet his pride, and revenge his fon. But where shall I find thy safety, Larthula with the dark-brown hair! thou art lovely as the sun-beam of heaven, and thy friends are low!" "Is the fon of battle fallen," I said, with a bursting figh? "Ceased the generous soul of Truthil to lighten through the field? My safety, Colla, is in that bow. I have learned to pierce the deer. Is not Cairbar, like the hart of the defast, father of fallen Truthil?"

The face of age brightened with joy. The crowded tears of his eyes poured down. The lips of Colla trembled. His grev beard whiftled in the blaft. "Thou art the fifter of Truthil," he faid; "thou burneft in the fire of his foul. Take, Dar-thula, take that fpear, that brazen shield, that burnished helm: they are the spoils of a warrior, a son of early youth! When the light rises on Seláma, we go to meet the carborne Cairbar. But keep thou near the arm of Colla, beneath the shadow of my shield. Thy sather, Dar-thula, could once defend thee; but age is trembling on his hand. The strength of his arm has failed. His soul is darkened with grief."

We passed the night in forrow. The light of morning rose. I show in the arms of battle. The grey-haired hero moved before. The son of Seláma convened, around the founding shield of Colla. But few are they in the plain, and their locks were grey. The youths had fallen with Truthil, in the battle of car-borne Cormac. "Friends of my youth!" faid Colla, "it was not thus you have seen me in arms. It was not thus I strode to battle, when the great Confaden fell. But ye are laden with grief. The darkness of age comes like the mist of the defart. My shield is worn with years! my fword is fixed * in its place! I faid to my foul, thy evening shall be calm: Thy departure like a fading light. But the storm has returned. I bend like an aged oak. My boughs are fallen on Seláma. I tremble in my place. Where art thou, with thy fallen heroes, O my beloved Truthil! Thou answerest not from thy rushing blast. The foul of thy father is fad. But I will be sad no more, Cairbar or Colla must fall! I feel the returning strength of my arm. My heart leaps at the sound of war."

"The hero drew his fword. The gleaming blades of his people rofe. They moved along the plain. Their grey hair ftreamed in the wind. Cairbar fat at the feaft, in the filent plain of Lona †. He faw the coming of the heroes. He called his chiefs to war. Why ‡ should I tell to Nathos, how the firife of battle grew? I have feen thee, in the midst of thousands, like the beam of heaven's fire: it is beautiful, but terrible; the people fall in its dreadful course. The spear of Colla slew. He remembered the battles of his youth. An arrow came with its found. It pierced the hero's side. He fell on his

^{*} It was the cuftom of ancient times, that every warrior at a certain age, or when he became unfit for the field, fixed his arms, in the great hall, where the tribe feafted upon joyful occasions. He was afterwards never to appear in battle; and this stage of life was called the time of fixing of the arms.

[†] Lona, a marfly plain. Cairbar had just provided an entertainment for his army, upon the defeat of Truthil the son Colla, and the rest of the party of Cormac, when Colla and his aged warriors arrived to give him battle.

[†] The poet, by an artifice, avoids the defeription of the battle of Lona, as it would be improper in the mouth of a woman, and could have nothing new, after the numerous deferiptions, of that kind, in the reft of the poems. He, at the fame time, gives an opportunity to Dar-thula to pafs a fine compliment on her lover.

his echoing fhield. My foul started with fear. I stretched my buckler over him; but my heaving breast was seen! Cairbar came, with his spear. He beheld Selama's maid. Joy rose on his dark-brown face. He stayed the lifted steel. He raised the tomb of Colla. He brought me weeping to Selama. He fpoke the words of love, but my foul was fad. I faw the shields of my fathers; the fword of car-borne Truthil. I law the arms of the dead; the tear was on my cheek! Then thou didft come, O Nathos! and gloomy Cairbar fled. He fled like the ghost of the defart before the morning's Beam. His hoth was not near: and feeble was his arm against thy fteel! Why art thou fad, O Nathos! faid the lovely daughter of Colla?"

"I have met," replied the hero, "the battle in my youth. My arm could not lift the spear, when danger first arose. My soul brightened in the prefence of war, as the green narrow vale, when the fun pours his streamy beams, before he hides his head in a ftorm. The lonely traveller feels a mournful joy. He fees the darkness, that flowly comes. My foul bright-ened in danger before I saw Selama's fair; before I faw thee, like a ftar, that shines on the hill, at night: the cloud advances, and threatens the lovely light! We are in the land of foes. The winds have deceived us, Dar-thula! The strength of our friends is not near, nor the mountains of Etha. Where shall I find thy peace, daughter of mighty Colla! The brothers of Nathos are brave! and his own fword has fhone in fight. But what are the fons of Ufnoth to the hoft of dark-browed Cairbar | O that the winds winds had brought thy fails, Ofear * king of men! Thou dift promife to come to the battles of fallen Cormac! Then would my hand be ftrong, as the flaming arm of death, Cairbar would tremble in his halls, and peace dwell round the lovely Dar-thula. But why doft thou fall, my foul? The fons of Ufnoth may prevail!"

"And they will prevail, O Nathos!" faid the rifing foul of the maid. "Never shall Darthula behold the halls of gloomy Cairbar. Give me those arms of brass, that glitter to the passing meteor. I see them dimly in the dark-bosomed ship. Dar-thula will enter the battle of steel. Ghost of the noble Colla! do I behold thee on that cloud? Who is that dim beside thee Els it the car-borne Truthil? Shall I behold the halls of him that slew Selama's chief? No: I will not behold them, spirits of my love!"

Joy rose in the face of Nathos, when he heard the white-bosomed maid. "Daughter of Selama! thou shinest along my foul. Come, with thy thousands, Cairbar! the strength of Nathos is returned! Thou, O aged Usnoth! shalt not hear that thy son has sled. I remember thy words on Etha; when my sails began to rise: when I spread them towards Erin, towards the mostly walls of Tura! "Thou goest," he said, "O Nathos, to the king of shields! Thou goest to Cuthullin, chief of men, who never sted from danger. Let not thine arm be feeble: neither be thy thoughts of slight; less the son of Semo should fhould fay, that Etha's race are weak. His words may come to Ufnoth, and fadden his foul in the hall." The tear was on my father's check.

^{*} Ofcar, the fon of Oslian, had long resolved on the expedition into Ireland, against Cairbar, who had assistanted his friend Cathol, the son of Moran, an Irishman of noble extraction, and in the interest of the family of Cormac.

He gave this flining fword!

"I came to Tura's bay: but the halls of Tura were filent. I looked around, and there was none to tell of the fon of generous Semo. I went to the hall of thells, where the arms of his fathers hung. But the arms were gone, and aged Lamhor * fat in tears. "Whence are the arms of fteel?" faid the rifing Lamhor. "The light of the fpear has long been abfent from Tura's dufky walls. Come ye from the rolling fea? Or from

Temora's + mournful halls?"

"We come from the fea," I faid, "from Ufnoth's rifing towers. We are the fons of Slis-fama ‡, the daughter of car-borne Semo. Where is Tura's chief, fon of the filent hall? But why fhould Nathos afk? for I behold thy tears. How did the mighty fall, fon of the lonely Tura?" "He fell not," Lamhor replied, "like the filent ftar of night, when it flies through darknefs and is no more. But he was like a meteor that shoots into a diffant land. Death attends its dreary courfe. Itself is the fign of wars. Mournful are the banks of Lego; and the roar of streamy Lara! There the hero fell, fon of the noble Ufnoth!" "The hero fell in the midst of slaughter," I faid with a bursting

* Lamh-mhor, mighty hand.

Slis-feamha, foft bosom. She was the wife of Usnoth, and daughter of Semo the chief of the ifle of mift.

[†] Temora was the residence of the supreme kings of Ireland. It is here called mournful, on account of the death of Cormac, who was murdered there by Cairbar, who usurped his throne.

arms

figh. "His hand was ftrong in war. Death

dimly fat behind his fword."

We came to Lego's founding banks. We found his rifing tomb. His friends in battle are there: his bards of many fongs. Three days we mourned over the hero: on the fourth, I ftruck the shield of Caithbat. The heroes gathered around with joy, and shook their beamy spears. Corlath was near with his host, the friend of car-borne Cairbar. We came like a stream by night. His heroes fell before us. When the people of the valley rose, they saw their blood with morning's light. But we rolled away, like wreaths of mist, to Cormac's echoing hall. Our swords rose to defend the king. But Temora's halls were empty. Cormac had fallen in his youth. The king of Erin was no more!

Sadness feized the fons of Erin. They flowly, gloomily retired: like clouds that, long having threatened rain, vanish behind the hills. The sons of Usnoth moved, in their grief, towards Tura's sounding bay. We passed by Seláma. Cairbar retired like Lano's mist, when driven before the winds. It was then I beheld thee, O Dar-thula! like the light of Etha's sun. "Lovely is that beam!" I faid. The crowded sigh of my bosom rose. "Thou camest in thy beauty, Dar-thula, to Etha's mournful chief. But the winds have deceived us, daughter of Colla, and the soe is near!"

"Yes, the foe is near," faid the rushing strength of Althos *. "I heard their clanging arms on the coast. I saw the dark wreaths of Erin's flandard. Diffinct is the voice of Cairbar *. Loud as Cromla's falling stream. He had feen the dark ship on the sea, before the dusky night came down. His people watch on Lena's plain. They lift ten thousand swords." " And let them lift ten thousand swords," faid Nathos with a fmile. "The fons of car-borne Ufnoth will never tremble in danger! Why doft thou roll with all thy foam, thou roaring fea of Erin? Why do ye ruftle, on your dark wings, ye whiftling ftorms of the tky? Do ye think, ye ftorms, that ye keep Nathos on the coast? No: his foul detains him, children of the night ! Althos! bring my father's arms: thou feeft them beaming to the stars. Bring the spear of Semo †. It stands in the dark-bosomed fhip!"

^{*} Althos had just returned from viewing the coast of Lena, whither he had been sent by Nathos, the beginning of the zight.

He brought the arms. Nathos covered his limbs, in all their shining steel. The stride of the chief is lovely. The joy of his eyes was terrible. He looks towards the coming of Cairbar. The wind is rustling in his hair. Dar-thula is silent at his side. Her look is fixed on the chief. She strives to hide the rising sigh. Two tears fwell in her radiant eyes!

"Althos!" faid the chief of Etha, "I fee a cave in that rock. Place Dar-thula there. Let † Semo was grandfather to Nathos by the mother's fide. The fpear mentioned here was given to Ufnoth on his marriage, it being the custom then for the father of the lady to give his arms to his fon-in-law.

² Cairbar had gathered an army, to the coast of Usser, in order to oppose Fingal, who prepared for an expedition into Ireland to re-establish the house of Cormac on the throne, which Cairbar had usurped. Between the wings of Cairbar's army was the bay of Tura, into which the ship of the sons of Usnoth was driven: so that there was no possibility of their escaping.

thy arm, my brother, be ftrong. Ardan! we meet the foe; call to battle gloomy Cairbar. O that he came in his founding fteel, to meet the fon of Ufnoth! Dar-thula! if thou shalt escape, look not on the fallen Nathos! Lift thy fails, O Althos! towards the echoing groves of my land.

"Tell the chief *, that his fon fell with fame; that my fword did not shun the fight. Tell him I fell in the midst of thousands. Let the joy of his grief be great. Daughter of Colla! call the maids to Etha's echoing hall! Let their songs arise for Nathos, when shadowy autumn returns. O that the voice of Cona, that Ossian, might be heard in my praise! then would my spirit rejoice in the midst of the rushing winds." "And my voice shall praise thee, Nathos, chief of the woody Etha! The voice of Ossian shall rise in thy praise, son of the generous Usnoth! Why was I not on Lena, when the battle rose? Then would the sword of Ossian defend thee; or himself sall low!"

We fat, that night, in Selma round the firength of the shell. The wind was abroad, in the oaks. The spirit of the mountain † roured. The blast came russling through the hall, and gently touched my harp. The sound was mournful and low, like the song of the tomb. Fingal heard it the first. The crowded sighs of his bosom rose. "Some of my heroes are low," said the grey-haired king of Morven. "I hear the found of death on the harp. Ossian, touch the trembling string. Bid the forrow rise; that Vol. 1.

[·] Uinoth.

[†] By the spirit of the mountain is meant that deep and melancholy found which precedes a storm; well known to those who live in a high country.

their spirits may fly, with joy, to Morven's woody hills!" I touched the harp before the king, the found was mournful and low. "Bend forward from your clouds," I faid, " ghosts of my fathers! bend. Lay by the red terror of your courfe. Receive the falling chief; whether he comes from a diffant land, or rifes from the rolling fea. Let his robe of mist be near; his spear that is formed of a cloud. Place an half-extinguished meteor by his fide, in the form of the hero's fword. And, oh! let his countenance be levely, that his friends may delight in his presence. Bend from your clouds," I faid, se ghosts of my fathers! bend!"

Such was my fong, in Selma, to the lightlytrembling harp. But Nathos was on Erin's shore, furrounded by the night. He heard the voice of the foe, amidft the roar of tumbling waves. Silent he heard their voice, and refted on his fpear! Morning rose, with its beams. The sons of Erin appear, like grey rocks, with all their trees, they foread along the coaft. Cairbar flood in the midst. He grimly smiled when he saw the foe. Nathos rushed forward, in his strength: nor could Dar-thula ftay behind. She came with the hero, lifting her shining spear. " And who are these, in their armour, in the pride of youth? Who but the fons of Usnoth, Althos and darkhaired Ardan?"

"Come," faid Nathos, "come! chief of high Temora! Let our battle be on the coast, for the white-bosomed maid. His people are not with Nathos; they are behind thefe rolling feas. Why doft thou bring thy thousands against the which of Etha? Thou didft fly * from him, in battle, battle, when his friends were around his fpear." "Youth of the heart of pride, shall Erin's king fight with thee? Thy fathers were not among the renowned, nor of the kings of men. Are the arms of foes in their halls? Or the shields of other times? Cairbar is renowned in Temora, nor does he fight with feeble men!"

He alludes to the flight of Cairbar from Seláma.

The tear started from car-borne Nathos. He turned his eyes to his brothers. Their spears flew at once. Three heroes lay on earth. Then the light of their swords gleamed on high. The ranks of Erin yield; as a ridge of dark clouds before a blast of wind! Then Cairbar ordered his people, and they drew a thousand bows. A thousand arrows slew. The sons of Usnoth fell in blood. They fell like three young oaks, which stood alone on the hill: The traveller saw the lovely trees, and wondered how they grew so lonely: the blast of the desart came, by night, and laid their green heads low; next day he returned, but they were withered, and the heath was bare!

Dar-thula ftood in filent grief, and beheld their fall! No tear is in her eye. But her look is wildly fad. Pale was her cheek. Her trembling lips broke fhort an half-formed word. Her dark hair flew on wind. The gloomy Cairbar came. "Where is thy lover now? the carborne chief of Etha? Haft thou beheld the halls of Ufnoth? Or the dark-brown hills of Fingal? My battle would have roared on Morven, had not the winds met Dar-thula. Fingal himfelf would have been low, and forrow dwelling in Selma!" Her shield fell from Dar-thula's arm. Her breaft of sinow appeared. It appeared; but it was stained with blood. An arrow was fixed in her fide. She fell on the fallen Nathos, like a wreath of fnow! Her hair spreads wide on his face. Their blood is mixing round!

"Daughter of Colla! thou art low!" faid Cairbar's hundred bards. "Silence is at the blue streams of Selama. Truthil's * race have failed. When wilt thou rise in thy beauty, first of Erin's maids? Thy sleep is long in the tomb. The morning distant far. The sun shall not come to thy bed and say, "Awake Dar-thula! awake, thou first of women! the wind of spring is abroad. The slowers shake their heads on the green hills. The woods wave their growing leaves. Retire, O sun! the daughter of Colla is afleep. She will not come forth in her beauty. She will not move in the steps of her lovelings."

Such was the fong of the balls, when they raifed the tomb. I fung over the grave, when the king of Morven came; when he came to green Erin to fight with car-born Cairbar!

^{*} Truthil was the founder of Dar-thula's family.

T H E

DEATH OF CUTHULLIN:

A

P O E L

ARGUMENT.

Cuthullin, after the arms of Fingal had expelled Swaran from Ircland, continued to manage the affairs of that kingdom as the guardian of Cormac, the young king. In the third year of Cuthullin's administration, Torlath, the son of Cantella, rebelled in Connaught; and advanced to Temora to dethrone Cormac. Cuthullin marched against him, came up with him at the lake of Lego, and totally defeated his forces. Torlath sell in battle by Cuthullin's hand; but as the too eagerly pressed on the enemy, he was mortally wounded. The affairs of Cormac, though, for some times supported by Nathos, as mentioned in the preceding poem, sell into confusion at the death of Cuthullin. Cormac himself was slain by the rebel Cairbar; and the re-establishment of the royal family of Ireland by Fingal, surnisses the subject of the epic poem of Temora.

DEATH OF CUTHULLIN:

A

PO'E M.

Is the wind on the flield of Fingal? Or is the voice of past times in my hall? Sing on sweet voice! for thou art pleasant. Thou carries away my night with joy. Sing on, O Bragela, daughter of car-borne Sorglan!

It is the white wave of the rock, and not Cuthullin's fails. Often do the milts deceive me, for the fhip of my love! when they rife round fome ghoft, and spread their grey skirts on the wind. Why dost thou delay thy coming, for of the generous Semo? Four times has autumn returned with its winds, and raifed the feas of Togorma*, fince thou hast been in the roar of attles, and Bragcla distant far! Hills of the isle of mist! when will ye answer to his hounds? But ye are dark in your clouds. Sad Bragcla calls in vain! Night comes rolling down. The face of ocean fails. The heath-cock's head is beneath his wing. 'The hind fleeps, with the hart of the defart. They shall rise with morning's light, and feed by the mosly stream. But my tears return with the fun. My fighs come on with the night. When wilt thou come in thine arms, O chief of Erin's wars?"

^{*} Togorma, i. c. the island of blue waves, one of the Hebrides, was subject to Counal, the son of Caithbat, Cuthullin's friend. He is sometimes called the son of Colgar, from one of that name who was the sounder of the family. Cennal a few days before the news of Torlath's revolt came to Temera, had sailed to Togorma, his native isle; where he was detained by contrary winds during the war in which Cuthullin was killed.

Pleafant is thy voice in Offian's ear, daughter of car-borne Sorglan! But retire to the hall of shells; to the beam of the burning oak. Attend to the murmur of the fea: it rolls at Dunfcai's walls: let fleep descend on thy blue eyes. Let the hero arise in thy dreams!

Cuthullin fits at Lego's lake, at the dark rolling of waters. Night is around the hero. His thousands spread on the heath. A hundred oaks burn, in the midft. The feaft of shells is smoaking wide. Carril strikes the harp, beneath a tree. His grey locks glitter in the beam. The ruftling blast of night is near, and lifts his aged hair. His fong is of the blue Togorma, and of its chief, Cuthullin's friend! "Why art thou abfent, Connal, in the day of the gloomy ftorm? The chiefs of the fouth have convened, against the car-borne Cormac. The winds detain thy fails. Thy blue waters roll around thee. But Cormac is not alone. The fon of Semo fights his wars! Semo's fon his battles fights! the terror of the ftranger! He that is like the vapour of death, flowly borne by fultry winds. The fun reddens in its prefence : The people fall around."

Such was the fong of Carril, when a fon of the foe appeared. He threw down his pointlefs fpear. He fpoke the words of Torlath! Torlath, chief of heroes, from Lego's fable furge! He that led his thousands to battle, against carborne Cormac. Cormac who was distant far, in Temora's * echoing halls: he learned to bend the bow of his fathers; and to lift the spear. Nor long didft thou lift the spear, mildly-shining beam of youth! death stands dim behind thee, like the darkened half of the moon, behind its growing light! Cuthullin rose before the bard +, that came from generous Torlath. He offered him the shell of joy. He honoured the son of songs. "Sweet voice of Lego!" he said, "what are the words of Torlath? Comes he to our feast or battle, the car-borne son of Cantela †?"

Temora's

"He comes to thy battle," replied the bard, to the founding ftrife of fpears. When morning is grey on Lego, Torlath will fight on the plain. Wilt thou meet him, in thine arms, king of the ifle of mift? Terrible is the fpear of Torlath! it is a meteor of night. He lifts it, and the people fall! death fits in the lightning of his fword!" "Do'l fear," replied Cuthullin, "the fpear of car-borne Torlath? He is brave as a thousand heroes: but my foul delights in war! The fword refts not by the fide of Cuthullin, bard of the times of old! Morning shall meet me on the plain, and gleam on the blue arms of Semo's fon. But fit thou, on the heath, O bard! and let us hear thy voice. Partake of the joyful shell; and hear the fongs of Temora!"

"This is no time," replied the bard, " to hear the fong of joy: when the mighty are to meet in O 4 battle,

* The royal palace of the Irish kings; Teamhrath, according to some of the bards.

[†] The bards were the heralds of ancient times; and their persons were sacred on account of their office. In later times they abssed that privilege; and as their persons were inviolable, they satirised and lampooned so freely those who were not liked by their patrons, that they became a public nrisince. Screened under the character of heralds, they grossy abused the enemy when he would not accept the terms they offered. † Cean-teola', head of a smile.

battle, like the strength of the waves of Lego. Why art thou fo dark, Slimora *! with all thy filent woods? No flar trembles on thy top. No moon-beam on thy fide. But the meteors of death are there: the grey watery forms of ghofts. Why art thou dark, Slimora! with thy filent woods?" He retired, in the found of his fong. Carril joined his voice. The music was like the memory of joys that are past, pleasant and mournful to the foul. The ghosts of departed bards heard on Slimora's fide. Soft founds fpread along the wood. The filent valleys of night rejoice. So, when he fits in the filence of the day, in the valley of his breeze, the humming of the mountain bee comes to Offian's ear: the gale drowns it in its course; but the pleasant found returns again! Slant looks the fun on the field! gradual grows the shade of the hill !

"Raife," faid Cuthullin, to his hundred bards, " the fong of the noble Fingal: that fong which he hears at night, when the dreams of his. rest descend: when the bards strike the distant harp, and the faint light gleams on Selma's walls. Or let the grief of Lara rife: the fighs of the mother of Calmar +, when he was fought, in vain, on his hills; when fhe beheld his bow in the hall. Carril, place the shield of Caithbat on that branch. Let the spear of Cuthullin be near; that the found of my battle may rife, with the grey beam of the east." The hero leaned on his father's t Calmar, the fon of Matha. His death is related at large in the third book of Fingal. He was the only fon of Matha; and the family was extinct in him. The feat of the family was on the banks of the river Lara, in the neighbourhood of Lego, and probably near the place where Cuthullin lay; which circumftance fuggested to him, the lamentation of Alclétha ever her fon.

^{*} Slia'mor, great bill.

father's fhield: the fong of Lara rose! The hundred bards were distant far: Carril alone is near the chief. The words of the fong were his: the found of his harp was mournful.

"Alclétha * with the aged locks! mother of carborne Calmar! why doft thou look toward the defart, to behold the return of thy fon? These are not his heroes, dark on the heath: nor is that the voice of Calmar. It is but the distant grove, Alclétha! but the roar of the mountain wind!" "Who + bounds over Lara's stream, sister of the noble Calmar? Does not Alclétha behold his spear? But her eyes are dim! Is it not the son of Matha, daughter of my love?"

" It is but an aged oak, Alclétha!" replied the lovely weeping Alona t. " It is but an oak. Alclétha, bent over Lara's stream. But who comes along the plain? forrow is in his fpeed. He lifts high the spear of Calmar. Alclétha, it is covered with blood !" " But it is covered with the blood of foes &, fifter of car-borne Calmar ! His fpear never returned unstained with blood: nor his bow from the strife of the mighty. The battle is confumed in his prefence: he is a flame of death, Alona! Youth of the mournful speed! where is the fon of Alclétha? Does he return with his fame, in the midst of his echoing shields? Thou art dark and filent! Calmar is then no more! Tell me not, warrior, how he fell.

^{*} Ald-cla'tha, decaying beauty: probably a poetical name given the mother of Calmar, by the bard himfelf.

[†] Alcletha fpeaks. Calmar had promifed to return, by a certain day, and his mother and his fifter Alona are reprefented as looking, with impatience, towards that quarter where they expected Calmar should make his first appearance.

[#] Aluine, exquifitely beautiful.

[§] Alcletha speaks.

^{||} She addreftes herfelf to Larnir, Calmar's friend, who had returned with the news of his death.

fell. I must not hear of his wound !" Why dost thou look towards the defart, mother of low-laid Calmar ?

Such was the fong of Carril, when Cuthullin lay on his shield. The bards rested on their harps. Sleep fell foftly around. The fon of Semo was awake alone. His foul was fixed on war. The burning oaks began to decay. Faint red light is spread around. A feeble voice is heard! The ghost of Calmar came! He stalked dimly along the beam. Dark is the wound in his fide. His hair is difordered and loofe. Joy fits pale on his face. He seems to invite Cuthullin to his cave.

"Son of the cloudy night!" faid the rifing chief of Erin. "Why doft thou bend thy dark eyes on me, ghost of the noble Calmar? Wouldest thou frighten me, O Matha's son! from the battles of Cormac? Thy hand was not feeble in war: neither was thy voice for peace. How art thou changed, chief of Lara! if thou now dost advise to fly ! But, Calmar, I never fled. I never feared the ghofts of night. Small is their knowledge, weak their hands; their dwelling is in the wind. But my foul grows in danger, and rejoices in the noise of steel. Retire thou to thy cave. Thou art not Calmar's ghost. He delighted in battle. His arm was like the thunder of heaven!" He retired in his blaft with joy, for he had heard the voice of his praise.

The faint beam of the morning rose. The found of Caithbat's buckler fpread. Green Erin's warriors convened, like the roar of many streams. The horn of war is heard over Lego. mighty Torlath came? "Why dost thou come with thy thousands, Cuthullin," faid the chief of Lego. "I know the strength of thy arm. Thy foul'is in an unextinguished fire. Why fight we not on the plain, and let our hofts behold our deeds? Let them behold us like roaring waves, that tumble round a rock: the mariners haften away, and look on their strife with fear."

"Thou rifest, like the fun, on my foul," replied the fon of Semo. "Thine arm is mighty, O Torlath! and worthy of my wrath. Retire, ye men of Ullin, to Slimora's fhady fide. Behold the chief of Erin, in the day of his fame. Carril! tell to mighty Connal, if Cuthullin must fall, tell him I accused the winds, which roar on Togorma's waves. Never was he absent in battle when the strife of my fame arose. Let his sword be before Cormac, like the beam of heaven. Let his counsel found in Temora, in the day of danger !"

He rushed, in the found of his arms, like the terrible spirit of Loda *, when he comes, in the roar of a thousand storms, and scatters battles from his eyes. He fits on a cloud over Lochlin's feas. His mighty hand is on his fword. Winds lift his flaming locks! The waining moon half lights his dreadful face. His features blended in darkness arise to view. So terrible was Cuthullin in the day of his fame. Torlath fell by his hand. Lego's heroes mourned. They gather around the chief, like the clouds of the defart. A thousand fwords rofe at once; a thousand arrows flew; but he stood like a rock in the midst of a roaring sea. They fell around. He strode in blood. Dark Slimora echoed wide. The fons of Ullin came. The battle fpread over Lego. The chief of Erin overcame. He returned over the field with his fame.

^{*} Loda, in the third book of Fingal, is mentioned as a place of worship in Scandinavia: by the pririt of Loda, the poet probably means Odin, the great deity of the northern nations. He is described here with all his terrors.

fame. But pale he returned! The joy of his face was dark. He rolled his eyes in filence. The fword hung, untheathed, in his hand. His fpear bent at every flep!

" Carril," faid the chief in fecret, " the ftrength of Cuthullin fails. My days are with the years that are past. No morning of mine shall arife. They shall feek me at Temora, but I shall not be found. Cormac will weep in his hall, and fay, " Where is Erin's chief?" But my name is renowned! my fame is in the fong of bards. The youth will fay in fecret, Olet me die as Cuthullin died! Renown cloathed him like a robe. light of his fame is great. Draw the arrow from my fide. Lay Cuthullin beneath that oak. Place the flield of Caithbat near, that they may behold me amidft the arms of my fathers!"

" And is the fon of Semo fallen?" faid Carril with a figh. " Mournful are Tura's walls. Sorrow dwells at Dunfcai. Thy fpouse is left alone in her youth. The fon * of thy love is alone ! He shall come to Bragéla, and ask her why she weeps? He shall lift his eyes to the wall, and fee his father's fword. "Whose sword is that?" he will fay. The foul of his mother is fad. Who is that, like the hart of the defart, in the murmur of his course? His eyes look wildly round in fearch of his friend. Connal, fon of Colgar, where haft thou been, when the mighty fell? Did the feas of Cogorma roll around thee? Was the wind of the fouth in thy fails? The mighty have fallen in battle, and thou wast not there. Let none tell it in Selma, nor in Morven's woody land.

^{*} Conloch, who was afterwards very famous for his great exploits in Ireland. He was fo remarkable for his dexterity in handling the javelin, that when a good markiman is defcribed, it has passed into a proverb, in the north of Scotland, He is unerring as the arm of Conlock.

land. Fingal will be fad, and the fons of the defart mourn!"

By the dark rolling waves of Lego they raifed the hero's tomb. Luith*, at a distance, lies.

The fong of bards rose over the dead.

"Bleft † be thy foul, fon of Semo! Thou wert mighty in battle. Thy strength was like the strength of a stream: thy speed like the eagle's wing. Thy path in battle was terrible: the steps of death were behind thy sword. Bleft be thy foul, son of Semo, car-borne chief of Dunscai! Thou hast not fallen by the sword of the mighty, neither was thy blood on the spear of the brave. The arrow came, like the sting of death in a blast; nor did the feeble hand, which drew the bow, perceive it. Peace to thy soul, in thy cave, chief of the isle of mist!"

"The mighty are dispersed at Temora: there is none in Cormae's hall. The king mourns in his youth. He does not behold thy return. The found of thy shield is ceased: his foes are gathering round. Soft be thy reft in thy cave, chief of Erin's wars! Bragéla will not hope for thy return, or see thy fails in ocean's foam. Her steps are not on the shore: nor her ear open to the voice of thy rowers. She sits in the hall of shells. She sees the arms of him that is no more. Thine eyes are full of tears, daughter of car-borne Sorglan! Bleft be thy soul in death, O chief of shady

* It was of old, the custom to bury the favourite dog near the master. This was not peculiar to the ancient Scots, for we find it practified by many other nations in their ages of heroism. There is a stone shewn still at Dunscai in the isle of Sky, to which Cuthullin commonly bound his dog Luath. The stone goes by his name to this day.

† This is the fong of the bards over Cuthullin's tomb. Every stanza closes with some remarkable title of the hero, which was always the custom in funeral elegies.

Tura!"

T H E

BATTLE OF LORA:

A

P O E M.

ARGUMENT.

Fingal, on his return from Ireland; after he had expelled. Swaran from that kingdom, made a feaft to all his heroes; he forgot to invite Ma-ronnan and Aldo, two chiefs, who had not been along with him in his expedition. They refented his neglect; and went over to Erragon king of Sora, a country of Standinavia, the declared enemy of Fingal. The valour of Aldo feen gained him a great reputation in Sora: and Lorna the beautiful wife of Erragon fell in love with him. He found means to escape with her, and to come to Fingal, who resided then in Solma on the western coast. Erragon invaded Scotland, and was slain in battle by Gaul the son of Morni, after he had rejected terms of peace offered him by Fingal. In this war Aldo fell, in a single combat, by the hands of his rival Erragon, and the unfortunate Lorma afterwards died of grief.

BATTLE OF LORAS

A

P O E M.

Son of the diftant land, who dwellest in the fecret cell! do I hear the sound of thy grove? or is it thy voice of songs? The torrent was loud in my ear; but I heard a tuneful voice. Dost thou praise the chiefs of thy land: or the spirits* of the wind? But, lonely dweller of rocks! look thou on that heathy plain. Thou sees green tombs, with their rank, whistling grass: with their stones of mossy heads. Thou sees them, son of the rock, but Ossian's eyes have failed.

A mountain-stream comes roaring down and fends its waters round a green hill. Four mostly stones, in the midst of withered grass, rear their heads on the top. Two trees, which the storms have bent, spread their whistling branches around. This is thy dwelling, Erragon +; this thy narrow house: the sound of thy shells have been long forgot in Sora. Thy shield is become dark in thy hall. Erragon king of ships! chief or distant

Sora!

^{*} Alluding to the religious hymns of the Culdees.

[†] Erragon, or Ferg-thonn, signifies the rage of the revers; probably a poetical name given him by Offian himself; for he goes by the name of Annir in tradition.

Sora! how haft thou fallen on our mountains? How is the mighty low? Son of the fecret cell! doft thou delight in fongs? Hear the battle of Lora. The found of its freel is long fince paft. So thunder on the darkened hill roars and is no more. The fun-returns with his filent beams. The glittering rocks, and green heads of the mountains fmile.

The bay of Cona received our fhips * from Erin's rolling waves. Our white fheets hung loofe to the mafts. The boinerous winds roared behind the groves of Morven. The horn of the king is founded; the deer farts from their rocks. Our arrows flew in the woods. The feaft of the hill is fpread. Our joy was great on our rocks, for the fall of the terrible Swaran. Two heroeswere forgot at our feaft: The rage of their bofoms burned. They rolled their red eyes in fecret. The figh burits from their breafts. They were feen to talk tegether, and to throw their fpears on earth: They were two dark clouds, in the midft of our joy; like pillars of mift on the fettled fea. They glitter to the fun, but the mariners fear a fform.

"Raife my white fails," faid Ma-ronnan, "raife them to the winds of the weft. Let us rufh, O Aldo! through the foam of the northern wave. We are forgot at the feaft: but our arms have been red in blood. Let us leave the hills of Fingal, and ferve the king of Sora. His countenance is fierce. War darkens around his fpear. Let us be renowned, O Aldo, in the battles of other lands!"

They took their fwords, their shields of thongs. They rushed to Lumar's refounding bay. They came

^{*} This was at Fingal's return from his war against Swarans

came to Sora's haughty king, the chief of bounding fleeds. Erragon had returned from the chace. His fpear was red in blood. He bent his dark face to the ground; and whiftled as he went. He took the ftrangers to his feafts: they fought and conquered in his wars.

Aldo returned with his fame towards Sora's lofty walls. From her tower looked the spouse of Erragon, the humid, rolling eyes of Lorma. Her yellow hair flies on the wind of ocean. Her white breaft heaves, like snow on heath; when the gentle winds arise, and slowly move it in the light. She saw young Aldo, like the beam of Sora's setting sun. Her soft heart sighed. Tears filled her eyes. Her white arm supported her head. Three days she sat within the hall, and covered her grief with joy. On the sourth she sled with the hero, along the troubled sea. They came to Cona's mostly towers, to Fingal king of spears.

"Aldo of the heart of pride!" faid Fingal rifing in wrath: "fhall I defend thee from the rage of Sora's injured king? who will now receive my people into their halls? Who will give the feaft of ftrangers, fince Aldo, of the little foul, has difhonoured my name in Sora? Go to thy hills, thou feeble hand! Go: hide thee in thy caves. Mournful is the battle we must fight, with Sora's gloomy king. Spirits of the noble Trenmor! When will Fingal cease to fight? I was born in the midst of battles*, and my steps must move in blood to the tomb. But my hand did not injure the weak, my steel did not touch the feeble in ^{*} Comhal the father of Fingal was flain in battle, againft the tribe of Morni, the very day that Fingal was born; fo that he may, with propriety, be faid to have been lorn in the midflef battles.

in arms. I behold thy tempests, O Morven! which will overturn my halls; when my children are dead in battle, and none remains to dwell in Selma. Then will the feeble come, but they will not know my tomb. My renown is only in fong. My deeds shall be as a dream to future times !"

His people gathered around Erragon, as the ftorms round the ghost of night; when he calls them, from the top of Morven, and prepares to pour them on the land of the stranger. He came to the shore of Cona. He sent his bard to the king; to demand the combat of thousands; or the land of many hills! Fingal fat in his hall with the friends of his youth around him. The young heroes were at the chace, far diftant in the defart. The grey-haired chiefs talked of other times; of the actions of their youth; when the aged Nartmor * came, the chief of streamy Lora.

"This is no time," faid Nartmor, "to hear the songs of other years: Erragon frowns on the coast, and lifts ten thousand swords. Gloomy is the king among his chiefs! he is like the darkened moon, amidst the meteors of night; when they fail along her fkirts, and give the light that has failed o'er her orb." " Come," faid Fingal, " from thy hall, come daughter of my love : come from thy hall, Bosinina +, maid of streamy Morven! Nartimor, take the steeds of the strangers. Attend the daughter of Fingal! Let her bid the king of Sora to our feast, to Selma's shaded wall. Offer him, O Bosmina! the peace of heroes, and the wealth of generous Aldo.

Our

[·] Neart-mór, great strength. Lora, noify.

⁺ Bof-mhina, foft and tender hand. She was the youngest of Fingal's children.

Our youths are far diftant. Age is on our trembling hands!"

She came to the hoft of Erragon, like a beam of light to a cloud. In her right hand was feen a fparkling shell. In her left an arrow of gold. The first, the joyful mark of peace! The latter, the fign of war. Erragon brightened in her prefence as a rock, before the sudden beams of the fun; when they issue for a broken cloud, divided by the roaring wind !

"Son of the diftant Sora," began the mildly blushing maid, " come to the feast of Morven's king, to Selma's shaded walls. Take the peace of heroes, O warrior! Let the dark fword reft by thy fide. Chufest thou the wealth of kings? Then hear the words of generous Aldo. He gives to Erragon an hundred steeds, the children of the rein: an hundred maids from distant lands; an hundred hawks with fluttering wing, that fly across the sky. An hundred * girdles shall also be thine, to bind high-bosomed maids. The friends of the births of heroes. The cure of the fons of toil. Ten shells studded with gems shall shine in Sora's towers: the bright water trembles on their ftars, and feems to be sparkling wine. They gladdened once the kings of the world +, in the midst of their echoing halls. These, O hero! shall be thine; or thy white-bosomed spouse. Lorma shall roll her bright eyes in thy halls:

Sanchified girdles, till very lately, were kept in many familied in the north of Scotland; they were bound about women in labour, and were fupposed to alleviate their pains, and to accelerate the birth. They were impressed with several mystical sigures, and the ceremony of binding them about the woman's waift, was accompanied with words and gestures which shewed the custom to have come originally from the Druids.

[†] The Roman Emperors

halls; though Fingal loves the generous Aldo: Fingal! who never injured a hero, though his arm is strong!"

"Soft voice of Cona!" replied the king, "tell him, he spreads his feast in vain. Let Fingal pour his spoils around me. Let him bend beneath my power. Let him give me the swords of his fathers: the shields of other times; that my children may behold them in my halls, and say, "These are the arms of Fingal." "Never shall they behold them in thy halls!" faid the rising pride of the maid. "They are in the hands of heroes, who never yielded in war. King of echoing Sora! the storm is gathering on our hills. Dost thou not foresee the fall of thy people, son of the distant land?"

She came to Selma's filent halls. The king beheld her down-caft eyes. He rofe from his place, in his firength. He shook his aged locks. He took the founding mail of Trenmor. The dark-brown shield of his fathers. Darkness filled Selma's hall, when he firetched his hand to his spear: the ghosts of thousands were near, and foresaw the death of the people. Terrible joy rose in the face of the aged heroes. They rushed to meet the foe. Their thoughts are on the deeds of other years: and on the fame that rifes from death!

Now at Trathal's ancient tomb the dogs of the chace appeared. Fingal knew that his young heroes followed. He ftopped in the midft of his courfe. Ofcar appeared the first; then Morni's fon, and Némi's race. Fercuth * shewed his gloomy form. Dermid spread his dark hair on wind.

^{*} Fear-cuth, the fame with Fergus, the man of the word, or a commander of an army.

wind. Offian came the laft. I hummed the fong of other times. My spear supported my fteps over the little streams. My thoughts were of mighty men. Fingal struck his bossy shield; and gave the difmal fign of war. A thousand fwords at once unsheathed, gleam on the waving heath. Three grey-haired fons of fong, raife the tuneful, mournful voice. Deep and dark with founding steps, we rush, a gloomy ridge, along: like the shower of a storm, when it pours on a narrow vale.

The king of Morven fat on his hill. The fun-beam of battle flew on the wind. The friends of his youth are near, with all their waving locks of age. Joy rose in the hero's eyes when he beheld his sons in war: when he faw us amidft the lightning of fwords, mindful of the deeds of our fathers. Erragon came on, in his ftrength, like the roar of a winter ftream. The battle falls around his fteps: death dimly stalks along by his fide!

"Who comes," faid Fingal, " like the bounding roe, like the hart of echoing Cona? His shield glitters on his fide. The clang of his armour is mournful. He meets with Erragon in the strife! Behold the battle of the chiefs! It is like the contending of ghosts in a gloomy storm. But fallest thou, son of the hill, and is thy white bosom stained with blood? Weep, unhappy Lorma, Aldo is no more!" The king took the spear of his strength. He was sad for the fall of Aldo. He bent his deathful eyes on the foe: but Gaul met the king of Sora. Who can relate the fight of the chiefs? The mighty stranger fell!

"Sons of Cona!" Fingal cried aloud, "ftop the hand of death. Mighty was he that is low. Vol. I. Much Much is he mourned in Sora! The stranger will come towards his hall, and wonder why it is fo filent. The king is falten, O stranger. The joy of his house is ceased. Listen to the found of his woods. Perhaps his ghost is murmuring there! But he is far distant, on Morven, beneath the fword of a foreign foe." Such were the words of Fingal, when the bard raifed the fong of peace. We stopped our uplifted fwords. We spared the feeble foe. We laid Erragon in a tomb. I raifed the voice of grief. The clouds of night came rolling down. The ghost of Erragon appeared to some. His face was cloudy and dark; an half-formed figh is in his breaft. " Bleft be thy foul, O.king of Sora! thine arm was terrible in war.!"

Lorma fat in Aldo's hall. She fat at the light of a flaming oak. The night came down, but he did not return. The foul of Lorma is fad ! "What detains thee, hunter of Cona? Thou didst promise to return. Has the deer been diftant far? do the dark winds figh, round thee, on the heath? I am in the land of strangers, who is my friend, but Aldo? Come from thy founding hills, O my best beloved !" Her eyes are turned toward the gate. She listens to the rustling blast. She thinks it is Aldo's tread. Joy rifes in her face! But forrow returns again, like a thin cloud on the moon. "Wilt thou not return, my love? Let me behold the face of the hill. The moon is in the east. Calm and bright is the breast of the lake! When shall I behold his dogs, returning from the chace? When shall I hear his voice, loud and distant on the wind? Come from thy founding hills, hunter of woody Cona!" His thin ghost appeared, on a rock, like a watery beam of feeble light: When the the moon rufhes fudden from between two clouds, and the midnight fhower is on the field! She followed the empty form over the heath. She knew that her hero fell. I heard her approaching cries on the wind, like the mournful voice of the breeze, when it fighs on the grafs of the cave!

She came. She found her hero! Her voice was heard no more. Silent fhe rolled her eyes. She was pale, and wildly fad! Few were her days on Cona. She funk into the tomb. Fingal commanded his bards; they fung over the death of Lorma. The daughters of Morven mourned her, for one day in the year, when the dark winds of autumn returned!

Son of the diffant land *! Thou dwelleft in the field of fame! Olet thy fong arife, at times, in praife of those who fell. Let their thin ghosts rejoice around thee; and the foul of Lorma come on a feeble beam †: when thou liest dow to rest, and the moon looks into thy cave. Then shalt thou see her lovely; but the tear is still on her cheek!

* The poet addresses himself to the Culdee.

+ Be thou on a moon-beam, O Morna, near the window of my rest; when my thoughts are of peace; and the din of arms is past.

FINGAL, B. I.

END OF THE FIRST VOLUME.

